PREFACE.

THIS collection of documents relating to Federal and Legislative Unions has been prepared, in the first place, for the use of students in the Honours School of History in the University of London who are working on the special subject, "The Unification of South Africa."

Certain constitutions are among the most familiar of political documents, and there are numberless commentaries upon them; but comprehensive collections of documents of this sort are lacking, and the assembling together in one volume of most of the historically important federal constitutions of modern times may, perhaps, be of general use to students of political institutions. In certain cases the device of legislative union has been preferred to federation, and some constitutional instruments embodying this device have been included for purposes of comparison. Some federal constitutions have had no long-continued existence, but are historically important as expressing particular points of view, or as directed to cope with particular dangers. Such are the New England Confederation of 1643, the Constitution of the Confederate States of America of 1861, and the abortive New Zealand Provincial Constitution of 1852. The Constitution of the Republic of the United States of Brazil has been included as an example of the important but comparatively little known constitutions of Latin America. The latest example of constitution-making, the constitution of the German Reich may profitably be compared with its predecessor, the constitution of the North German Confederation of 1867, which served the German Empire from 1871 to the revolution of November, 1918.

Certain extracts from the speeches of the statesmen concerned in the setting-up of the new constitutions have been included in order to shew something of the ideas that moved them. Considerations of space have severely limited such selections, but students who are desirous of extending their reading in this direction, may be referred to Elliot's Debates on the Federal Constitution, Alexander Hamilton's arguments in the Federalist, and Messrs. Egerton and Grant's Canadian Confederation, which contain much valuable material of a similar kind in relation to the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Responsible government in the British Empire is so closely bound up with federation that no apology is necessary for the inclusion of extracts concerning it.

My acknowledgments are due to my former pupil Mr. Laurence Hollingsworth, B.A., now of the Department of Education, Zanzibar, for his patient and skilled assistance in preparing the various documents for the press.

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION.

"By a Sovereign State," says Bernard,¹ "we mean a community or number of persons permanently organized under a sovereign government of their own; and by a sovereign government we mean a government, however constituted, which exercises the power of making and enforcing law within a community, and is not itself subject to any superior government. These two factors, one positive, the other negative—the exercise of power and the absence of superior control—compose the notion of sovereignty, and are essential to it." The idea of a State necessarily implies a fixed abode within territory definitely belonging to and occupied by its citizens, who pay habitual obedience to those persons in whom superiority is vested. This obedience is rendered in deference to the so-called "internal sovereignty," which is vested in the rulers of the state either by traditional usage or by the provisions of a written constitution. The "external sovereignty" of the state consists in its independence in respect to all other political societies, and this is in theory restricted only by a body of usages that have received the general assent of mankind and are termed International Law. The sovereignty of a state, both internal and external, has either become vested in it in the course of far-back ages when civil society was gradually shaping itself, or it has been acquired in modern times by a definite act. Internal sovereignty was formally assumed upon the completion of the written instrument whereby the citizens of the new state declared their independence of the political community to which they formerly owed allegiance. But external sovereignty became full and complete only when that political community formally acquiesced in the separation.

A state is a fluctuating body as to the individual members of which it is composed, but as to the society it is one and the same body whose existence is perpetuated by a constant succession of new members. It differs from other states in having a different origin, and its existence continues either until society is completely dissolved into anarchy, or until it is merged into some other state. The merging may be complete either by conquest or by voluntary absorption, in both of which cases the existence of the merged state has come to an end. Within modern times states have in certain cases formed permanent associations one with another wherein, while still retaining some part of their own sovereign power and separate existence, they have resigned a portion of their sovereignty into the hands of a common authority. To such an act of association the term "federation" is applied, while a more complete but still voluntary association, by which the existence of two or more states is merged in that of a newly founded state, is called "unification." The written instrument whereby these changes are made of legal effect and the new relations of the citizens to the sovereign power are regulated are called respectively "federal" and "unified constitutions." A federal constitution only regulates the relations of the associated states with one another and of them and their citizens with the central power. The relations of the citizens with the surviving state¹ government remains after federation still regulated to a considerable extent by its own constitution. When the associating states merge their existence under a unified constitution, their earlier constitutions are destroyed save in so far as is provided by the new instrument. This now becomes the fundamental law regulating the relation between the sovereign power and the citizens.

In every case where federation or voluntary unification of previously independent states has taken place, an enquiry into their history shows that they have long been in closer political contact and have had far more interests in common than is usual between independent states. Their act of permanent association is the result of causes that have long been at work, and it is precipitated by some sudden access of difficulty or danger that has a common effect upon all the associates. In certain cases, however, a federal relation between separately governed political communities may be reached in an opposite direction. A centralized or unitary state may attempt to cope with political difficulties by the grant of a separate and inalienable legal status to groups of citizens living in an outlying portion of its territory whose administration from the centre is inconvenient. Such cases have been frequent in the British Empire, and in the United States and Canada newly settled territories, which were at first administered from the centre, have, after a time, been erected into full States of the Union or Provinces of the Dominion, and thus placed upon a footing of equality with the originally associating states. All these cases are of modern date, and their consideration lies rather beyond that of the essential principles of federation.

Simple states have in the course of history become linked together in many ways and in varying degrees of intimacy, and this linking may considerably affect their relations with other powers. Unions are usually classified under three heads: (1) Personal Unions, (2) Real Unions, and (3) Federal Unions. The typical "personal" union was that which existed between Great Britain and Hanover between 1714 and 1837. The sovereignty of each state remains unimpaired though each is ruled over by the same prince ; their relations with other powers are distinct, and the states are in no sense regarded as one corporation in international law. A "real" union exists when two or more sovereign states, each preserving its internal sovereignty with distinct fundamental laws and political institutions, merge their external sovereignty and appear as one in their relations with foreign powers. Scotland and England were in such a real union under a single monarch between 1603 and 1707 ; Austria and Hungary, though separate sovereign states, were in real union from the Pragmatic Sanction of 1723 down to 1849, and again from 1867 to 1918, appearing in international affairs as a single power, the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Sweden and Norway were in like situation from 1815 to the Treaty of Karlstad in 1905, by which their separation was effected. In practically every case real and personal unions have come about between monarchies and their union has generally been effected by dynastic causes. Federal unions are more complex in their development and must be approached from a different angle.

Independent states may enter into contracts with one another to accomplish certain purposes of common interest without in any way derogating from their complete sovereignty. Such contracts are called "treaties." As a rule treaties of alliance are temporary in character and are directed to a particular purpose, but some are of a much more sweeping kind and bind the contracting powers in stipulated circumstances to give unlimited aid one to the other, including assistance in the waging of offensive or defensive war. Such treaties of alliance may be so comprehensive in their provisions as to compel the allies to undertake common action in almost all their foreign relations but, as a rule, any such alliance does not exist for long. It either develops into a permanent and closer association, or is dissolved in favour of some fresh grouping of allies. In certain instances in past centuries where the association between the states lasted for a long period and especially where the allies were individually weak but collectively strong, the alliance was called a league. More than one such league developed into a permanent association and acquired machinery for common action. It thus became what is known as a "confederation," a Staatenbund, wherein the associates were no longer such fully independent states as before, for they had certainly resigned some portion of their sovereignty into the hands of the central body. The states are connected together by a compact which does not essentially differ from an ordinary treaty of alliance, and the internal sovereignty of each state remains unimpaired, for the resolutions of the federal body are not enforced upon individual citizens, but through the agency of each state government which gives to them the force of law. But the external sovereignty of the confederated states is as a rule diminished, as in the case of a real union. The confederates bind themselves not to enter into relations with foreign powers independently of one another, and resign the greater part of their external sovereignty into the hands of the confederation. Confederate unions have differed widely in the extent to which this resignation of power has been carried, and it is therefore difficult to distinguish them in the beginning from close alliances. They have not as a rule proved satisfactory to their members for long, and have either broken up, or passed into the closer form of association called "federal union," or have become completely merged into a single unitary state.

A "federal state" (compositive state, Bundesstaat) is a perpetual union of several sovereign states based first upon a treaty between those states or upon some historical status common to them all, and secondly upon a federal constitution accepted by their citizens. The central government acts not only upon the associated states but also directly upon their citizens. Both the internal and external sovereignty of the states is impaired, and the federal union in most cases alone enters into international relations. This is not, however, invariably the case, for under the strictly federal union of the German Empire, which existed from 1871-1918, the member states retained some of their external sovereignty and some power of entering into treaty relations with one another and with foreign states. On the other hand, in the typical federal union, that of the United States of America under the Constitution of 1789, the external sovereignty of the associate states has been entirely absorbed by the Federal State, and only their internal sovereignty remains. But even this is rather a matter of legality and convenience of government than of fundamental importance; since the close of the Civil War, in which it was proved conclusively that the Union was one and indivisible, the Federal government has completely overshadowed the states in all political matters.

Most writers on Federalism have devoted a considerable part of their attention to the federal unions that were formed among certain of the city states of Ancient Greece. To the student of political theory they afford much interest and a basis for comparison with modern federations, but there is no historical connexion, and the historian must trace the beginnings of the European associations of to-day amid the happenings of the Middle Ages. Two sharply distinct lines of descent are to be traced among modern federal unions, the first leading from the mediæval Empire to the Swiss and German Confederations, the second in quite a different way to the federations and unions of the English-speaking world which have exercised so considerable an influence on constitutional development in Latin America. These lines of descent demand attention in turn, and, since the continental line has much the earlier origin, it may be considered first.

The nominal sovereignty of the Carolingian emperors over the whole of Christendom, that was a fundamental conception under Charlemagne and his immediate successors, had completely broken down by the end of the eleventh century. It had been to some extent revived under the Saxon emperors, but even at the height of their power the little effective suzerainty that could be exercised embraced only Germany, Switzerland, Burgundy and the Low Countries, and the ancient Lombard kingdom in North Italy. But the rise of the great feudal vassals broke down the control of the central power in these regions under weak emperors, and every part of the empire strove to free itself from all outside interference. By the middle of the twelfth century the cities of the Lombard Plain had become practically independent states, and it is among them that the first sign of re-grouping into new combinations is found in the growth of the Lombard Leagues to withstand the reassertion of Imperial control. Milan, Lodi, Piacenza, and Cremona first leagued together as early as 1093 against the Emperor Henry IV, but the great League was formed in 1167 to oppose joint military resistance to the designs of Frederick Barbarossa, who attempted to enforce ancient Imperial restrictions in Italy. The decisive struggle began in 1174 and lasted till 1183, when at the Peace of Constance Frederick acknowledged defeat and the Imperial power in Italy became merely nominal. But the struggle was renewed when Frederick II intervened in Italian affairs and fresh leagues were formed to resist him between 1226 and the final downfall of the Hohenstaufen about 1250. While the dangers to be faced were acute, the association between the members of the Lombard Leagues was very close and almost amounted to "confederation" under the rule of a congress meeting at irregular intervals and known as the Rectores Societatis Lombardiæ, but the attacks of the emperors were beaten off in so comparatively short a time that their menace was insufficient to hammer the temporary leagues into a permanent confederation.

The exhaustion of the Hohenstaufen emperors in their Italian struggles and the weakness of those who succeeded them threw all centralized power in Germany into almost complete abeyance, leaving the richer and more powerful cities as practically independent powers, though all acknowledged the nominal sovereignty of the Emperor. But the decay of government went so far during the thirteenth century as to form a serious menace to all commerce and even to civilization. Under these circumstances neighbouring cities or those having common interests began to associate themselves together into leagues, the most important of which was the Rhenish Confederation (Rheinischer Städtebund), formed in 1254 among the towns of the Rhine valley from Basle to Cologne. The league not only had a commercial purpose in safeguarding common economic interests, but also was of great political importance in withstanding the attacks of hostile princes. Its constitution was very loose, but the representatives of the associated city states met together in assemblies called Colloquia at stated intervals to decide upon common policy and to apportion the military quotas to be provided by each member of the league. There was a rudimentary federal court to act as arbiter in disputes between members, though it had little effective power to enforce its decisions. The Rhenish Confederation lasted for about a century, but it broke up before the rising power of the Habsburgs; various leagues of lesser strength and less cohesion were formed in South Germany, and the northern cities joined the more formidable and longer-lived Hanseatic League, which not only had purposes of defence but a real and fairly effective federal organization.

While Italian and German city states were entering into association to withstand the exercise of the Imperial power, a similar process of rudimentary confederation was going on among the petty rural communities of central Switzerland for defence against the encroachments on their liberties and the domination of their neighbour the Count of Habsburg. Three remote districts in the heart of the Swiss mountains, Schwyz, Uri, and Untenwalden, had in the course of the struggles between the Hohenstaufen emperors and the Papacy secured their freedom from their lords, and in one way or another had come to hold immediately of the Emperor, who was, as a rule, too preoccupied to interfere. This reichsfreiheit gave them many valuable privileges, and they defended it only with much difficulty and repeated assistance one to another from 1231 to 1291, when Rudolf III, the Habsburg emperor, died. His death relieved the immediate pressure upon them, and at once the men of the Forest communities determined upon a renewal of their earlier alliances in a more complete and solemn form. The resulting perpetual league was solemnly concluded on 1 August, 1291, and forms the earliest constitutional document of the Swiss Confederation and the earliest federal pact of modern times.

The league thus formed might have been no more permanent than those between the Suabian or Italian towns had it not been for the continual menace of the Habsburg power. The attack of Leopold of Austria was beaten off at Morgarten in 1315 and the pact of confederation renewed, the original league of three states being joined in 1339 by the city of Lucerne. The constant hostilities between Austria and her neighbours during the fourteenth century drove other communities one by one to seek the help of the confederates of the four Forest Cantons and to enter into league with them. Bern, Zurich, Glarus, and Lug were included, and by the Pfaffenbrief of 1370 and the Covenant of Sempach of 1393 the confederation received a rudimentary political constitution that marked it off from a mere temporary alliance, for the principle of decision by a majority was introduced. On many occasions during the fifteenth century divergencies of policy between the confederates led to civil war and threatened the break up of the league, but in the long run the danger from external enemies proved too menacing for the disruptive tendencies to succeed. The war against Charles the Bold of Burgundy involved prolonged action in common, and though it was followed by serious quarrels which seemed to threaten the immediate dissolution of the Confederation, at last a complete understanding was reached in the Covenant of Stans, 1481, whereby the control of the federal Diet over the confederates was strengthened and the Sonderbund or separate alliance of five cities within the confederation was brought to an end. Fribourg and Solothurn were at the same time admitted as new members, Basle and Schaffhausen in 1501, and Appenzell in 1513, thus completing the list of free communities within the Bund. On the constitutional basis of the four instruments mentioned all the relations of the confederates were governed until 1798, though with constant internal friction. The agreements on which the confederacy was based were concluded between the governments of the various cantons and not between their citizens. No such thing as a Swiss people could be said to exist, political rights were most unevenly distributed, and there were repeated revolts against oligarchical tyranny. But community of interest generally compelled the cantons to common action towards outsiders, as it did in the similar but lesser League of the Grisons communities and the republic of the Valais, which in the sixteenth century came to associate regularly with the Swiss cantons in foreign affairs. Confederation was clearly a matter of prolonged growth induced by common interests in the face of external menace.

While in the south-west the Swiss confederation was slowly being consolidated under the threat of Habsburg tyranny, the great commercial cities of North Germany were being urged in the direction of a federal association more by economic than by political causes. The Hanseatic League took its rise at the beginning of the thirteenth century in various associations of merchants to control the Baltic trade, but it only became important after the alliance of the three cities, Lübeck, Rostock, and Wismar for the protection of their traders in the wild countries of the north and east. These alliances were at first of a temporary character and were negotiated after the fashion of an ordinary treaty, but in face of the exactions of the King of Denmark upon their commerce and his attacks upon their trading factories, the association of the towns became much closer and took on a political character, since it provided for a common military force. External menace acting along with community of economic interest welded the cities into a confederation from 1367 onwards in a somewhat similar fashion to what was going on among the Swiss cantons. At the height of its prosperity the Hanseatic League was a real confederation, governed in common matters by an assembly of instructed delegates called the Bundestag or Hansetag, in which a decision could be reached by a majority vote. But the greater cities could not always be relied upon to obey the mandates of the Bundestag, and they steadily refused to accept the terms societas or universitas as correct descriptions of the League. It was to them merely firma confederatio, and they always retained their freedom to secede from it. With the complete break-up of the Empire in the later sixteenth century and the convulsions of the Thirty Years' War, the inherent weakness of the League, that resulted from the geographical dispersion of its members, accelerated its collapse. Political interests in the long-run proved themselves more powerful than economic, and owing to differing geographical circumstances they were necessarily disruptive. Only Lübeck, Bremen, and Hamburg remained in alliance in 1629, and by the time of the Peace of Westphalia (1648) the League had ceased to exist.

The organization of the Holy Roman Empire during its last three centuries of decay (1526-1806) is of little or no importance to the student of federalism, for despite its nominal form of a loose confederation, any little cohesion that it had derived only from feudal conceptions. The states were independent one of another, and entered into fresh groupings and alliances that usually overstepped the Empire's borders, and were guided according to the general changes of the European situation. No real central power existed, and the only way of securing obedience was by undertaking war. Neither community of race nor of language has much influence in welding together a confederation when political and economic causes are adverse.

The last and in some ways the most significant European confederation before the nineteenth century arose among the cities and little feudal states on the extreme north-western confines of the Empire. There during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries there was built up, partly from territories owing nominal allegiance to the Empire and partly from non-Imperial lands, a composite group of states that though they had many similar political privileges, held them independently one of another as the achievements of gradual historic growth. Only one political obligation became common to them all, allegiance to the same sovereign—the Duke of Burgundy, but about the middle of the fifteenth century the Dukes when they required the grant of subsidies began to appeal not to individual provinces, but to delegates from them all summoned to meet in Estates-General. No merging of power was involved, but community of allegiance led to the development of a common political organ and thus to rudimentary confederation. After a time the meetings of the States-General were not solely confined to the apportionment of responsibility for grants to the prince, but took to the discussion of matters of common interest like the appointment of a regent. Though the growth of a sense of community throughout the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands was very rapid during the hundred years between 1450 and 1550, the provinces jealously preserved their independence one of another, and there was little in common save the princely power.

When in the middle of the sixteenth century the place of overlord came to be filled by a King of Spain who was entirely despotic in temper, the men of every province found themselves threatened with the loss of their historic privileges or their drastic modification to bring about an artificial uniformity. The menace was economic as well as political, for the prosperity of the cities was impaired by the imposition of excessive taxation to meet the heavy military expenses and the frequent embargoes on commerce that were necessitated by Spain's adventurous foreign policy. These political and economic causes were brought to a head and their effects made more acute by the rigours of religious persecution, until finally the troubles culminated in 1568 in the outbreak of revolt against Spanish authority and the opening of the war that was to last for eighty years.

The war led at first to no breach in the continuity of political development, for the fiction that the struggle was merely one against evil ministers and not against the power or rights of the prince, the sole institution common to them all, was preserved for many years. Of necessity this involved the exercise of sovereignty in the prince's absence and the carrying on of government within each province by the only other existing political organ, the provincial estates. Owing to the circumstances of the struggle, this withdrawal from the princely power was much more complete in the northern provinces than in Brabant and Flanders, which were occupied by Spanish troops and where obedience could therefore be enforced. The estates of the northern provinces became habituated to the exercise of sovereignty by officials chosen by themselves, or, as in Holland, and Zealand by a stadholder who, though royally appointed, was their leader in revolt. It was impossible, however, for a similar habituation to take place in the States-General, where all the provinces were represented, for their meetings were only summoned at rare intervals when Spain was attempting to find some basis of pacification. Even when they did meet deeply rooted divergencies of opinion at once appeared between the southern and the northern provinces, those who lay open to military occupation by the Spanish forces and those who were able to hold it off by the exertions of their armies. The seventeen provinces that in 1550 had seemed well on the road to achieve some sort of federal union, had twenty-five years later been cleft in two by the ravages of war, each part being hammered by adversity into closer and closer association independently of the other.

But this crucial fact did not appear clearly to the actors in the struggle for many years. What was in reality the irreversible step towards separation was taken in the north, and involved a real confederation of the modern sort. Each of the two provinces of Holland and Zealand was really an association of municipalities, that were as independent one of another as any of the towns of the mediæval empire. They had become accustomed, however, to working together for more than a century, and they were all strongly affected by common economic interests. Under the lead of their stadholder, William of Orange, the estates of Holland and Zealand, i.e. the delegates of the municipalities of the provinces, met together in joint session at Delft, in April, 1576, and determined to make their league perpetual by a resignation of a large part of their powers into the hands of a single over-riding authority, the stadholder, who was invested not only with all the ancient powers of the sovereign in external affairs, but also with a much larger measure of internal control. This Act of Federation not only united the provinces, but also went far in the direction of unification of the municipal republics of which each province was composed. It was not in the least dictated by theoretical considerations, but was a practical measure of defence devised to cope with imminent military danger. It went so much further than any previous federal agreement in modern times that it marked a very real step forward. Only among adjacent communities closely affected by similar political and economic circumstances of acute difficulty was its achievement possible.

For the moment the importance of the Act of Federation was obscured by the wave of indignation against Spanish excesses that swept over all the provinces at the news of the "Spanish Fury" in Antwerp in November, 1576. External attack once more precipitated union, and in the Pacification of Ghent a scheme was agreed upon between the delegates of all the seventeen provinces that, if it had endured, would have led to a federation of them all with a common States-General. But unity of feeling was short-lived. Differences of religion, political and economic interest proved too deep-seated to admit of effective common action, and at length on 5 January, 1579, the deputies of the southern provinces of Hainault, Douai, and Artois bound themselves in a defensive league at Arras as a preliminary to effecting a reconciliation with the King of Spain. The provinces of the north at once replied by gathering round the federation of Holland-Zealand. In the Union of Utrecht, signed by the associates on 29 January, 1579, they bound themselves "as though they were one province" to resist all foreign enemies, including the King of Spain. The confederacy of the United Provinces was thus brought into being to deal with the enormously enhanced military danger that they feared from the south, and its provisions bear full evidence of its preparation to cope with a particular political situation. Owing to the protraction of the struggle for seventy years more the provisions of the union became the permanent constitution of the confederacy, and were supplemented by the Act of Abjuration of 26 July, 1587, whereby the representatives of the United Provinces solemnly absolved themselves from their allegiance to the King of Spain, and thus assumed the full sovereignty they had long possessed in all but name. The long and exhausting struggle that had to be sustained before the Spanish danger was finally repulsed welded the confederacy into a permanent federal union, but it was not until the upheaval of 1795 that the next step forward to complete unity was accomplished.

The growth of federalism in the English-speaking countries has been brought about by similar causes and under generally similar conditions to those that have furthered it on the continent of Europe. But historical conditions have made the manner of growth and the resulting associations very different. In the English constitutional theory of the eighteenth century all sovereignty belonged to the King, but the monarchy was carefully limited and balanced. The sovereignty of the King over all Englishmen was indefeasible wherever they might be, but, on the other hand, they, too, had indefeasible rights, and, above all, that of being consulted in representative assembly before the executive power was exerted in matters that directly concerned them.

When, at the beginning of the seventeenth century, Englishmen had gone oversea to establish colonies in Virginia, Bermuda, St. Christopher's, Barbados, Massachusetts, and so on, they took their rights to representation with them, and in each colony an assembly was set up to take counsel with the governor concerning the internal affairs of the community. Each colony was independent of every other, their only common link in theory being the allegiance that every one of their individual citizens owed to the King. The sovereignty of the King was exercised for the good of the Empire as a whole, and every colony accepted as necessary the arrangement whereby the relations between different parts of the empire, especially in matters of trade, were regulated by the King in Parliament, i.e. by the King's ministers in counsel with his subjects in the representative assembly of the central part of his realm. But from the very beginning the constitutional doctrine was held that the sovereign power within a colony, mostly evidenced by the power of taxation, lay in the King in the assembly of the colony, and not in the Parliament of England, in which the colonists had no representation.

Just as independent states may enter into alliance for the accomplishment of a common purpose, so the New England colonies, when faced with great danger of attack by Indian tribes in 1643, agreed to enter into a confederation for mutual defence, and pledged themselves to contribute in proportion to their numbers. The agreement bears some signs of having been influenced by Dutch precedents, which were familiar to the colonists. It was never of great importance, for the threatened external dangers were too soon removed to have much effect in consolidating the confederation at the expense of the individual colonial governments. The high-handed scheme of James II. for sweeping away all colonial boundaries in New England and merging the whole into a single province under Sir Edmund Andros was also only of temporary interest, for it had not come into effective operation before the Revolution of 1688 came to restore the old arrangements.

It was not until the beginning of the eighteenth century that the colonial system of the empire reached some degree of stability in a form that can now be recognized as essentially federal in principle. If it be granted that the essence of federalism is the separation of the powers of government over a particular community, some of the powers being placed in the hands of one authority and some in another, so that both cut concurrently on the citizens but each has its own sphere of action, then undoubtedly the old colonial system was federal in practice. The central authority or Imperial government had charge of foreign affairs, the navy and army, war and peace, the collection of customs dues, the management of unsettled lands, and the relations with the Indian tribes on the frontier. All these matters affected the life of every colonial without the intervention of his elected assembly. But the separate colonies managed their own internal police, raised their own taxes for local purposes, regulated local trade, and generally governed their citizens according in most cases to the provisions of a written constitutional instrument or charter which they regarded as a compact between them and the Crown. The system was apparently one of intricate complexity, but it was in reality very flexible, because it had grown up out of a multitude of devices used to deal with practical difficulties, only those which had succeeded being retained.

During the period down to 1763, the external menace of the power of France and Spain, with whom the colonists might at any moment find themselves at war, kept them from any sustained protest against the exercise of the Imperial power.

There were constant petty disputes, especially about constitutional rights in the West Indies, but there was a general acquiescence in the system as it had grown up. The Imperial government had such engrossing problems to handle in coping with rebellion and maintaining English interests in Europe, that no attempt could be made to systematize colonial government or do more than deal with practical problems as they arose. On several occasions during the first half of the eighteenth century, proposals were made for a systematization of the relations between the continental colonies, but they never obtained any considerable measure of support. The colonies recognized that they had many common interests and valued their association as members of the Empire, but they had not yet such a sense of community of danger from without as to be willing to relinquish any of their autonomy.

Serious danger to the continuance of the opportunist system arose after the victorious close of the Seven Years' War, when schemes of reorganisation were pushed forward from the centre in an attempt to cope with the new burdens of empire that had been assumed. The resulting agitation in the colonies provoked enquiry into the whole constitutional position. But the complex system that had gradually grown up defied explanation or justification according to old theories or precedents, and for ten years incessant constitutional wrangles went on in an attempt to find some formula that would reconcile the necessary exertion of imperial sovereignty for the common good with the claim of the colonists to all the indefeasible rights to self-government that the rest of the King's subjects possessed. Out of the welter of argument two sharply opposed theories ultimately emerged and held the field. The one commended itself to the dominant party in the colonies, the other to the majority in the British Parliament, but neither estimated accurately the practical system under which the colonies had been governed for nearly a century. /

nothing could legally be done without the concurrence of a majority of that assembly. It was admitted that as a matter of convenience the colonies had tacitly acquiesced in the regulation of certain affairs, and notably external trade, by the British Parliament, but it was held that this was no derogation of their rights, and that they might properly modify their acquiescence when circumstances changed. The continental colonies in fact maintained the doctrine expounded at an earlier date by Jamaica, that their legislatures held the same co-ordinate position towards Parliament as had belonged to the Scottish Parliament before the Act of Union of 1707.

The advocates of the opposite theory maintained that the sovereignty of the Imperial Parliament was supreme throughout the King's realms, and that it was only for practical convenience that it did not often exercise its power to legislate for the internal affairs of the colonies. The colonial legislatures, according to this theory, were subordinate to the Imperial Parliament, as the Irish Parliament undoubtedly was, where the power of concurrent legislation from Westminster had frequently been exerted. Neither side appreciated fully the federalism of the old colonial system, though in both the rival constitutional theories there was some federal principle implicit. The differences separating them were, of course, much deeper seated than is revealed in the doctrines that are alone here considered, but when all the many combined causes led to the outbreak of armed revolt, constitutional grievances were placed in the forefront.

The Thirteen Continental Colonies solemnly abjured their allegiance to the Crown in the Declaration of Independence of 1776, and successfully vindicated their abjuration in six years of war. When by her signature of the Treaty of Versailles in 1783 Great Britain acknowledged that independence, constitutional growth began anew on either side of the Atlantic, but along sharply divergent lines. In the colonies that retained allegiance to the Crown there was no longer a doubt that supreme control was vested in the King in the Imperial Parliament. Only such powers belonged to the colonial assemblies as were delegated to them ; the colonies were really " dependencies " of Great Britain, as they were constantly called until far on into the nineteenth century. When new colonies received rights of representative government, their constitutions were embodied in Imperial Acts, though when at a later date the fuller powers of responsible government were first granted, this was effected by administrative action and sustained by constitutional convention. Such rights when once granted were indefeasible, and the colonies by acquiring them achieved practically full internal control of their affairs. In the course of time groups of such self-governing colonies would proceed to adapt to their circumstances the formal federal devices that were worked out in the United States.

In the seceding political communities, however, the constitutional position was at first not at all clear. A critical question awaited solution which may be propounded in two opposite forms. Had each of thirteen separate colonies achieved its independence of its former sovereign and so become a sovereign state that was free to determine the conditions on which it would enter into a confederacy with its neighbours ? Or, on the other hand, had the people of the United States abjured their allegiance as individuals and now must enter into a new social compact ? The citizens in each of the separate States made the negotiation of such a social compact one of their earliest acts after the Declaration of Independence, and eleven States established new State Constitutions on popular votes within a very short time. But no clear decision was reached as to the nature of the Confederation that all admitted to be a practical necessity. The last paragraph of the Declaration of Independence apparently gave assent to the first form of the crucial constitutional question. " These United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states. All political connexion between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved. As free and independent states they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent states may of right do." The same theory was expressed in the Articles of Confederation that were prepared by the Continental Congress immediately after the Declaration and finally agreed upon on 15 November, 1777. "Each State retains its sovereignty freedom, and independence and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled. The said States hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defence, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare." The Articles were signed by the delegates as representing the sovereign legislature in each State. They were ratified by the State governments on different conditions and at widely differing dates, but they were never based upon a popular vote. The system, therefore, was strictly parallel with the confederate pacts of the Swiss Cantons and the United Provinces. The Confederation was only a Staatenbund, though it was a great advance upon all previous confederations, for much more power was nominally placed in the hands of Congress, and there were more opportunities for real debate than in the semi-diplomatic procedure of the old Swiss Diets or the States-General of the Netherlands.

The pressure of more than ten years of the practical difficulties of government was needed to drive home to the minds of the people of the United States the essential unity of their interests, which far transcended any theoretical doctrines about the nature of the sovereignty of the States and their legislatures. The colonies had grown up and flourished under a system that was really federal though not republican; matters of common interest had been managed by an authority outside all the colonial governments, and, so long as its power was based upon the consent of the governed, the system worked. Between 1765 and 1782 the interest of opposition to the Imperial Government and the desire to achieve military success in the war were common to all the colonies, and these interests were strong enough to ensure the transfer of external obedience from the Crown to the revolutionary leaders. General Washington had therefore sufficient popular consent behind him to act with vigour for the whole United States. But with the restoration of peace State particularism and the desire to escape common burdens became infinitely more powerful than the cumbrous and inefficient Confederation, which attracted no loyalty and could base itself on no direct popular suffrage. Things went from bad to worse. Public credit, obedience to authority and social order everywhere decayed, and it seemed as though the association of the States was certain to fall asunder.

As in other cases where forward steps towards federation have proved possible, the minds of the great majority of citizens were so disturbed by the pressure of political and economic evils that they were ripe to embark upon drastic change. The immediate troubles were of three kinds; first the external menace of a dreaded renewal of war with Great Britain and the dangers apprehended from Spanish encroachments in the Mississippi Valley; second, the dangers to public order that arose in various States from the outbreak of armed rebellion against the enforcement of taxation and the maintenance of justice; and third, the great economic distress caused by the depreciation of the currency, the lack of credit to restore foreign trade, and the general want of public confidence which hampered all enterprise. It became more and more evident to thinking men that the only hope lay in amending the Articles of Confederation so as to strengthen the central power. Matters at last came to a head in 1787, and advantage was taken of a partial conference at Annapolis on economic questions to arrange for a general Convention of delegates from all the States to meet at Philadelphia. There behind closed doors in the freest of discussion a new compact was hammered out that not only removed the dangers to the continued existence of the United States, but recorded an unprecedented advance in the application of political ideas to the machinery of government.

Some of the boldest reformers in the Convention, whose views were voiced by Alexander Hamilton, were prepared to go the whole way and form a new government which should pervade the whole United States with decisive powers and a complete sovereignty. They would establish a general and national government and annihilate the state distinctions and state operations. The ideas underlying their views were derived from the success of the Union between England and Scotland. Hamilton confessed that in his opinion the British Constitution was the best form of government which the world had produced, while on the other hand the lessons of history showed that "all federal governments are weak and distracted," and that, as in the Swiss Cantons and Germany, they cannot prevent the confusions which prevail between their members. But a unitary solution was impossible in face of the opposition of the State governments, whose annihilation it threatened. Its advocates in the Convention were in a hopeless minority, and, since "federalism" and "republicanism" were thought by many to be necessarily associated, they were suspected of cloaking under their pleas for strong government a mere desire for the restoration of monarchy.

At the opposite pole from Hamilton were those who insisted on the equality of all the sovereign states, and claimed that their views alone were "truly federal and republican." They desired to see all the old principles of confederation preserved, and only certain amendments made in the Articles that might strengthen the central power, but would still leave Congress in its old position of a federal diet. Between these opposing views there was what was called the "national" party, which wished to get rid of the doctrine that the Union was a mere treaty between independent states. They desired to get behind the State governments to the people of the United States as members of a single political community, who by a majority of their votes could give to the central government a more powerful sanction. This would involve of necessity a change in the principles of the Articles of Confederation, but it was really a revulsion to the sounder principles of the division of sovereignty that had infused the government of the colonies before the schism. The objections of its advocates to what they called the "federal principle" as evidenced in Switzerland and the United Provinces of the Netherlands were just as strong as those of Hamilton. They maintained, however, that it was possible to find a compromise whereby their old colonial powers might be left to the States, while the common powers that the colonies had been accustomed to see wielded by an external authority might be entrusted to a national executive, legislature and judiciary chosen by the people at large. The debates between the advocates of these opposing schemes formed the essential part of the struggle in the Constitutional Convention, and in the event the "national" plan carried the day, as it appears, because it was the most nearly akin to the actual pre-revolutionary system. The powers placed by the new Constitution in the federal executive, legislature and judiciary, were very nearly those that had been exercised by the Imperial authorities and those which the colonial legislatures had never been accustomed to handle. Compromises of great importance had to be reached before the system could be accepted by all, and these gave to the State governments a larger weight in the national government than the original proposers of the plan had allowed them. From these compromises sprang some of the difficulties that were to lead to controversies over State Rights for seventy years. Only by the bloody struggle of the Civil War were the controversies to be settled in favour of the unchallengeable supremacy of the national government. But the compromises did not affect the essential accomplishment of the Convention, the formulation in the Constitution of the new federal principle that had slowly been shaped in the old colonial system.

From 1789 onwards the so-called "national" government of the United States began to take its place as the typical example of the federal principle. A new meaning came to be attached to the terms "federal" and "federation" that differed widely from that attached to them before and during the Convention debates of 1787. In the United States the new implications displaced the old before the end of the century, but European publicists knew little of democratic government in America before De Tocqueville wrote in 1835, and for them "federal" continued generally to imply the form of government by Diet that prevailed in Germany and Switzerland.

The old federal constitution of the United Provinces was swept away by the invasion of the French Revolutionary armies in 1795, and for twenty years the Netherlands were practically subject to military rule according to French centralizing ideas. The unitary Batavian Republic that was at first set up saw many changes of constitution before the country was at last absorbed into the French Empire. When the time for reconstruction came in 1814, the wish to retain a unitary form of government was universal, for long before the Revolution the federal system had fallen into decay and had become irksome to the classes without political rights, while the power and prestige of the House of Orange had been steadily increasing. The Dutch had no desire to restore the cumbrous machinery of the estates and States-General, which was identified with inequitable privilege, and when the Prince of Orange was restored to his possessions the country accepted with unanimity his grant of a constitution for a unitary kingdom. The designs of the powers at the Congress of Vienna aimed at a further degree of unification and the inclusion of the southern provinces, but their union was only short-lived and the South achieved independence in 1830 as the new unitary kingdom of the Belgians.

The Swiss confederacy in the eighteenth century was an agglomeration of almost every kind of government in great complexity. The degree of political liberty that was possessed ranged from the primitive democracy of the Forest Cantons to such complete servitude of the subject territories under some of the cities that the people had no political rights. The confederacy abounded in inequitable privileges ; many of the petty states were seething with discontent, and the prosperity of all was damaged by the many customs, barriers, and inconsistent commercial restrictions. When the French armies invaded the country in 1798, ostensibly to assist a democratic revolt, they were at first generally welcomed as deliverers. The establishment of a unitary Helvetic Republic on the French model was popular, because it swept away all privileges and inequalities of political status, but French rule proved particularly oppressive and confiscatory, and when Bonaparte withdrew his troops in 1802, the country fell asunder into two hostile parties and civil war broke out. The "centralists" favoured the retention of the constitution of the Helvetic Republic, while the "federalists" wished to return to a loose confederation as of old. To prevent a complete lapse into anarchy the French again entered the country, and an Act of Mediation was imposed upon the two parties in 1803. By this agreement a federal constitution with a central diet and an executive authority such as had not before existed was set up, the abolition of privilege was confirmed, and six new cantons, formed out of the previously subject lands, were placed on a footing of equality with the old confederates. Unification failed to secure support in Switzerland as it had done in Holland, because during the short period of its trial it had become identified with a system of foreign military oppression.

The federal system of the Act of Mediation lasted with a considerable measure of success until the overthrow of French influence in 1813. At the Congress of Vienna it was proposed to re-establish the complicated old system in its entirety, but it was realized that it was impossible to restore abolished privileges. The Swiss agreed to accept the constitution that was finally prepared by the Congress, in return for a guarantee of their neutrality by the powers ; the right to political freedom of the previously subject territories was maintained, but the reaction deprived the confederation of an executive, and all common business had to be transacted in the Diet where the cantons appeared as sovereign states and unanimous approval was necessary for important action. The removal of all internal customs barriers and oppressive commercial restrictions, however, aided in the growth of a community of feeling between the men of different cantons, and the extension of liberal ideas prepared the country for a step forward.

The defects arising from the recognition of cantons as fully sovereign states incapable of control by the confederacy, save by force of arms, were fully illustrated by the growth within the Confederation of separate Sonderbünde or confederations of cantons, which desired to further their own interests at the expense of their neighbours. In 1832, and again in 1845, armed action of a Sonderbund of Catholic cantons against the forces of a majority of the confederates was attempted. But the civil war that followed resulted, in 1847, in the complete victory of the federal forces and the overthrow of the particularist cantons, thus leading to the establishment of an entirely new constitution. The progress of liberal ideas had made great changes in the outlook of Swiss citizens, and had furthered the merging of local patriotism in a wider sense of nationality. Through the writings of Alexis de Tocqueville and others, they had become familiar with the improved devices of federal government which had achieved success in the United States of America. The committee that was entrusted after the civil war with the preparation of the new constitution determined to adapt these devices to the circumstances of Switzerland, and to accept integrally the principle of basing a greatly strengthened central power upon the popular vote throughout the country as a whole. The Swiss Confederation ceased to be a mere Staatenbund, and became a Bundesstaat, in which power resides both in the federal government and the cantons, their fields of action being clearly delimited. The fear of executive control prevented the placing of great authority in the hands of a President as in the United States, and under the constitution of 1848 there was no federal court of justice like the Supreme Court. After a good deal of constitutional agitation, however, the distrust of the central authority was largely overcome, and at last, in 1874, the constitution was revised and assumed the form which, save for various minor amendments, has proved lasting. The growth of the sense of national unity has been encouraged, and has proved entirely compatible with the preservation of a strong cantonal patriotism. Though the old names were retained, Switzerland has since 1848 ceased to be a mere "confederation," and has become a real "federal republic."

In no part of Europe save, perhaps, in Italy did the events of the Revolutionary and Napoleonic periods result in more drastic permanent changes than in Germany. The many little Italian states that were overthrown could not be effectively restored in 1815, and at length the whole peninsula became absorbed into the unitary Kingdom of Italy that grew out of the Kingdom of Sardinia. But in Germany, though much unification has been brought about and the Prussian state has grown immensely by the absorption of its neighbours, the main changes of the nineteenth century were towards federation in the modern sense. From the Peace of Westphalia to the French Revolution the confederacy of the German states was the merest sham, and masked a far more acute rivalry between Prussia and Austria, the two most powerful members, than prevailed between either of them and the powers beyond the borders of Germany. The first results of the Revolution were the absorption of most of the small states and free cities by their powerful neighbours, and the secularization of the ecclesiastical principalities. This immensely facilitated further progress, for it reduced the number of possible partners in a confederation and provided fewer opportunities for foreign intrigues. After the complete defeat of Prussia in 1806, the newly consolidated states of Western Germany were associated at Napoleon's command in a new confederacy called the Rhenish Confederation, but it never achieved anything more than a nominal existence, and disappeared when, in 1813, the French armies were expelled. The removal of antiquated privileges and the acquisition by the people at large of a considerable measure of equality of legal status, which was accomplished between 1806 and 1813, prepared the way for further progress.

The attempted settlement of German affairs by the Congress of Vienna in 1815 was directed towards the re-establishment in reality of the nominal confederacy that had existed before 1789. But it was impossible to reverse the acts of mediatization and secularization that had been accomplished, and the rivalries of the larger states that had come into existence provided more powerful allies for the two contestants in the struggle for dominance, so that the Federal Diet was doomed to complete impotence as before. It was little more than a congress of ambassadors, it had no executive or judiciary, and was so weak that Germany at this period can hardly be called even a Staatenbund. A forward movement was urged from two directions. First, there was a gradual consolidation of the Prussian State whereby the previously separate provincial estates were amalgamated into a Combined Diet, which later under Liberal pressure was based to some extent on a popular vote, and, having the power of taxation over all the Prussian territories, came to be called the Parliament. Prussia became more of a unit round which the smaller states could coalesce. Secondly, the Prussian bureaucracy gradually furthered the removal of all internal restrictions on commerce and the placing by treaty of the management of the customs system of the associated states in the hands of a common authority. By a series of steps there was formed in 1834 the Deutscher Zoll und Handelsverein, and its steadily growing influence through all the states of Northern Germany accustomed them to work together under the leadership of Prussia and to look forward towards a federal union. It seemed at one time as though aspirations towards the national union of Germany would be realized by the extension of the Zollverein into a close federation of the states composing it, but the confused nature of the struggle intermingled aspirations for effective government with demands for popular suffrage in such a way as to prevent so direct a line of advance. In certain states the more extreme advocates of federal union were also in favour of republicanism, and pointed to the United States of America as the ideal form of government, wherein it had been proved that true liberty could only flourish under a federal republic based upon the votes of a widely extended electorate. Swiss precedents also exercised an influence on the minds of political reformers, but they failed to see that these were inapplicable to the case of Germany because of the way in which Prussia and Austria completely overshadowed all other members of the confederacy and dominated all other interests with their rivalry.

The tangled movements of 1847 and the early months of 1848 resulted in the summoning by the plenipotentiaries of the Federal Diet of representatives from the people of the various states to meet in an assembly or Vorparlament for the purpose of drafting a new federal constitution. There for the first time three opposing parties clearly took their stand against one another. The Republicans desired to introduce a constitution closely modelled on that of the United States with its necessary concomitants, the abolition of monarchy and privilege and the introduction of popular suffrage. The Conservatives, who were smaller in number but powerful in the more important states, were determined that monarchy should not be destroyed, and wished to strengthen the governments of the states by administrative reforms. The Liberals, who were by far the largest party, though little organized and having little unity of design, were willing to retain monarchy in the states and the Empire, but desired to place the supreme power in the hands of a national parliament or Reichstag elected by the German people as a whole.

The Vorparlament effected nothing amidst its dissensions, save the summoning through the Federal Diet of a National Assembly to be elected generally to decide upon a constitution. The Assembly met in the Pauluskirche at Frankfort in May, 1848, and proceeded to set up a central executive to act for the whole of Germany in external affairs. But the turn of events was unfavourable to the accomplishment of its purpose of achieving federal union, and the victory of the Conservative forces in Prussia and Austria brought about the withdrawal of their representatives from the Assembly and its collapse. The constitution of the German Reich that was hammered out during long debate would have given Germany a governmental system which, while retaining the dynasties, was based upon the sovereignty of the people and infused with the federal principles of the United States. But the scheme was entirely abortive, and after an interregnum of two years reactionary and particularist forces regained control in the states, and the old Federal Diet was re-established.

During the period 1850-1866 the Zollverein under the leadership of Prussia steadily increased its power in commercial affairs, and the states composing it became more and more accustomed to working together. In 1866 Prussia, which under Bismarck's leadership had firmly knit her various provinces into unity, formally declared her freedom from the old confederacy, and Austria took up arms in the name of the Federal Diet to bring her back to obedience. The smaller states separated into opposing camps, and a brief but decisive struggle took place. Austria was defeated and ejected from Germany, and the territories of her ally, the Kingdom of Hanover, were incorporated in the Prussian monarchy. Before beginning the war Prussia had bound herself by treaty with her smaller allies, who had been accustomed to work under her leadership in the Zollverein, to establish a new federal union. The North German Confederation or Bund was therefore set up, and in 1867 the Diet of the representatives of the twenty-one states composing it agreed upon a close federal union, based not upon the sovereignty of the people but upon that of the states and their rulers. In 1870 the four South German states agreed by Treaty to join the Confederation, and on 18 January, 1871, the King of Prussia assumed the dignity of German Kaiser, the title that had been held by the supreme head of the mediæval empire. Practically none but consequential changes, however, were made in the constitution of 1867, and this remained essentially intact down to the German revolution of 1918. Under it Germany has been a real Bundesstaat, with the executive power in the hands of a permanent head, the King of Prussia, sovereignty being based not upon a popular vote but on divine right.

The constitution of 1867-70 was merely the embodiment in a single document of the agreements (or treaties) that had been negotiated between different sovereign states. Their rulers resigned almost all their external sovereignty and some portion of their internal sovereignty into the hands of a common executive and legislative body. In this action the German people had no direct share, though, since they acquiesced in it, the government of the Kaiserreich may be said to have been based upon popular consent. Power lay in the hands of the Kaiser and the Bundesrath composed of accredited representatives of the state governments. But there was a popularly elected Reichstag representing the people of Germany as a whole, which had no direct power save in matters of taxation and legislation. The federal state of the Kaiserreich was only a very partial approximation to a federal union of the modern sort.

The revolution of November, 1918, radically changed this position, and brought about the establishment of a constitution based, like that of modern Switzerland, partly upon the suffrages of the German people, partly upon the sovereignty of popularly elected governments in the States (Länder). In the struggles over the framing of this constitution in 1919 the advocates of a policy of centralization and the wiping away of all State distinctions were condemned because they also were the supporters of unpopular doctrines brought in from the Russian anarchy.

The centralizers were identified with foreign influences, just as the "centralists" in Switzerland in 1802 were identified with French Jacobins, and Alexander Hamilton in 1787 with British monarchy. The result was therefore, as in those cases, a compromise between extremes, between the restoration of a government based on State sovereignty and a centralized unitary republic. The result of the compromise was to produce a real federal constitution very similar in essence to that produced by the Frankfort Assembly in 1849.

In the new constitution the sovereign power is based upon the popular vote, in part directly and to a less extent indirectly through the popular governments of the States. The same principles are exhibited as in other modern federal constitutions, and therefore for the first time all existing federative governments express their federalism in the same general way. Not only does the federal principle as worked out in the American and Swiss constitutions appear in this latest piece of political architecture, but the results of British experience in the nineteenth century have also had influence. The executive power resides in the President elected by the votes of the whole people, but he can only exercise this power on the advice of the Chancellor and Ministers of the Reich, on whom responsibility rests. They require the confidence of the Reichstag for the exercise of office, and must resign should they lose that confidence. The constitution, therefore, embodies as its essential principles not only the federalism based upon popular sovereignty that was formulated in the American Convention of 1787 as the result of political growth in the eighteenth century, but also the device of responsible government that has been one of the main achievements of British constitutional growth. No political device had a greater vogue in the latter half of the nineteenth century than this product of British invention, and its adoption by the German constitution-makers was not a mere artificial imitation, but lay directly in the line followed by liberal political thought on the Continent. It is probable, however, that the Weimar Assembly was to some extent swayed by the examples of responsible government, combined with a popularly based federal system, which are exhibited in the self-governing dominions of the British Empire.

The influence of the federal precedent formulated in the United States was very powerful with the constitution-makers in the new republics of Latin America, which achieved their independence of Spain between 1810 and 1825. In almost every one of them the new constitutions were closely modelled upon that of the federal republic of the north, though the highly centralized governments of the old Spanish colonial vice-royalties had furnished no basis of self-government in their administrative divisions. The elaborate federal constitutions produced were therefore entirely artificial, and had no existence save on paper. In every case, so far as any stable government could be established, it was based upon a succession of military dictatorships, which alternated with civil war. The experience of Latin America has proved conclusively that the good government of the United States has not been a product of its federalism, but is the result of a deeper cause, the capacity of its citizens for real political responsibility. Within recent years the Argentine Confederation and the United States of Brazil have made some approach to effective federal government, but even in those countries it would appear that all real power resides in the central government, and that their constitutions are rather federal in form than in practical working.

The most important extensions of the work of the Convention of 1787 have taken place within the British Empire, where the essential conditions of federalism have been found in full measure. When the growth of a new empire began again immediately after the loss of the Thirteen Colonies, it was far more centralized than the old had been. There was none of that practical division of responsibility that was really informal federalism. The burden of the government of the colonies lay on the shoulders of the Imperial Cabinet, and the moneys for its support had to a very considerable extent to be found by the British taxpayer. For purposes of convenience or in obedience to tradition the colonists might be permitted to have representative assemblies, but they were distinctly subordinate, like a modern county council; their legislative measures had to be submitted for the control of the Home Government, and Parliament could and did pass measures which had full legislative effect in the internal affairs of the colonies. It may be said that all sovereignty lay in the Crown in the Imperial Parliament. The system lasted in full operation for more than fifty years, but as the colonies gradually grew out from a state of extreme poverty and dependence, so the unsatisfactory results of excessive centralization became more and more apparent in the communities where there was a large majority of citizens of full political capacity.

The most advanced colony was Upper Canada, and there the difficulties between the representative Assembly and the Imperial Government culminated in 1837 in the outbreak of rebellion. The acute discontent that prevailed in the maritime provinces sprang to a considerable extent from the same desire for self-government; while the revolt in Lower Canada, though influenced to some extent by this cause, was induced more by racial strife. The demand for responsibility from those who had not taken part in the revolts became so insistent as to demand some drastic measure of reform from the Imperial authorities. Lord Durham, the statesman sent out to plan such reform, insisted, in his report, with great emphasis on the influence of the proximity of self-governing communities in the United States in fostering the colonists' discontent with their dependent situation. He set himself to consider how far the systems on either side of the border could be assimilated and to find the causes of the comparative success of American methods. He discerned the essential cause in the extent to which the citizens of the States were responsible for their own good government through the machinery of popular elections, and he propounded as the necessary remedy for Canada's troubles a relaxation of the minute Imperial control over the internal affairs of the colonies that had prevailed since 1776. He urged a division of powers; the colonists were to be responsible for their own government in matters of internal concern, and the Imperial Government in matters of common concern to the whole Empire. This was unmistakably a federal solution by a division of sovereignty. The fact that Lord Durham also proposed the addition of the device whereby colonial governors should avoid difficulties in the management of internal concerns by choosing ministers acceptable to the elected assemblies, should not obscure the fact that an essential of his plan for responsible government was a return towards the opportunist federal system that had been evolved in the practical government of the colonies during the first half of the eighteenth century.

The assimilation of the British system to that of the United States, which was desired by reformers of the liberal school, is brought out clearly in a speech of Sir William Molesworth. Speaking in 1850 he said, "I maintain that whenever the local circumstances of a colony will admit the existence of a colonial parliament, the colonial parliament ought to possess powers corresponding with those of the British Parliament, with the necessary exception of Imperial powers. Our colonial empire ought to be a system of colonies clustered round the hereditary monarchy of England." By the gradual adoption during the period 1840-50 of the policy first worked out by Lord Durham, a federal system was restored to the Empire, which, though nowhere rigidly formulated, has been the essential of dominion government since that date. Internal power over their own affairs has been placed fully in the hands of popular governments in the self-governing colonies (or dominions as they are now called); external sovereignty and control over matters of common concern have remained in the hands of the Imperial Government. That further developments are foreshadowed in the most recent period in the growth of the importance of Imperial conferences and in other ways merely indicates that the political growth of the Empire continues. It does not controvert the truth of the statement that since the middle of the nineteenth century the relation of the Imperial Government to the dominions has been essentially federal.

Lord Durham, however, never used the term "federalism" to describe the new Imperial relations that he proposed. He reserved the term to describe the relations of the North American colonies with one another if certain other measures of reform were decided on. A federal form of government was not unknown to the British Empire, for the colonies in the Leeward Islands had been associated together in this way as early as 1689. Not merely was there a legislative assembly in each of the islands, there was also a general legislature for the whole of the group, which consisted of two houses, a nominated Council and an elected Assembly. The system did not work well, it led to a great deal of friction, and the meetings of the General Assembly fell into abeyance between 1710 and 1793, when it was abolished. The islands were placed under the rule of a single governor in 1833, but the separate legislatures were still maintained, and during the years 1833-1837 the Imperial authorities were debating the advisability of restoring the old General Legislature for the group and thus re-establishing a federal system. This step was not taken, however, till 1871. The importance of the discussions of the thirties concerning the Leeward Islands, and of other debates upon this sort of federation which were going on at the same time, lies in their influence upon Lord Durham's mission. Before he arrived in Canada (he tells us) he favoured a federal solution for the troubles of the colonies, and contemplated the establishment of a General Legislature for all British North America, while still retaining the colonial assemblies. But he changed his opinion for reasons which he clearly expressed. "A federal union would produce a weak and rather cumbrous government; a colonial federation must have, in fact, little legitimate authority or business, the greater part of the ordinary functions of a federation falling within the scope of the imperial legislature and executive ; and the main inducement to federation, which is the necessity of conciliating the pretensions of independent states to the maintenance of their own sovereignty, could not exist in the case of colonial dependencies, liable to be moulded according to the pleasure of the supreme authority at home." He therefore decided strongly in favour of complete legislative union, which, he believed, alone would give vigorous control of the rebellious French minority in Lower Canada and an efficacious government for the whole of the colonies.

No forward step was possible until the full development of Durham's real contribution to colonial government and the growth of responsibility in the colonies had made them no longer "liable to be moulded according to the pleasure of the supreme authority at home." The extent of the powers granted to the self-governing colonies between 1840 and 1860 was much greater than that recommended by Lord Durham, and they became possessed of almost complete internal power. They also acquired some small measure of the powers usually included in external sovereignty, for by the grant of complete commercial freedom they could enter individually into commercial treaties with foreign powers according to their own desires and without dictation from the Imperial government. By 1860, therefore, the colonies were even freer than had been the original thirteen American States under the Articles of Confederation. Their internal authority was fully vested in governments based upon the popular vote, and the way was clear for a final step towards federal union in the same direction as that taken in the United States. The first achievement of this step came in the colonies of British North America, where the influence of the political precedents of their great neighbour was most potent and the necessary conditions were most fully satisfied.

The colonies were geographically contiguous, they were all in the same stage of political development, their sense of community of national interest was rapidly growing, they were menaced in 1864-67 by a very real danger of annexation by the great military power which the United States had developed during the Civil War, and they were troubled by similar and very acute economic difficulties.

Federation came about in much the same way as it had done in 1787-89, and though the final sanction had to be given by an Act of the Imperial Parliament, that sanction was really based not upon the consent of the British electorate, but upon that of the citizens of British North America as a whole. So, too, when the people of the Australian colonies decided to establish a federal union, the path lay open to them without impediment from the Imperial Government. In each case popular governments, possessing practically full internal sovereignty, decided to resign either the whole or a portion of their powers into the hands of a central federal government, whose authority was based upon the votes of the whole community. In Canada the Dominion Government, having acquired the whole power, resigned a portion of it into the hands of the provincial governments; in Australia the States still retained the residue of power, but in both cases the principle was essentially the same.

When a federal union successfully fulfils its purpose of providing the people with an orderly and efficacious government, its importance grows at the expense of the State governments. They are gradually overshadowed and the electors come to take more interest in national than in local questions. Parties are formed upon a national basis, and by degrees the federal union, though still maintained in form, comes to differ very little in practice from a legislative union with subordinate provincial assemblies. When the people of South Africa determined upon a political change to adapt their institutions more closely to their needs, they contemplated at first a federal union according to the Canadian and Australian precedents. But the discussions that took place in the constitutional convention ultimately brought about a change in this design, and it was decided instead to take a step that followed the Anglo-Scottish precedent of 1707, to sweep away all the existing governments and to place internal power in South Africa wholly in the hands of a new central government. A complete legislative union was thus effected by a process that was similar to that which had preceded federal unions in the other English-speaking countries. Where full political sovereignty is based upon the votes of the people, there is no vital difference between the two forms of union, and it is only a matter of practical convenience and political expediency as to which is adopted in a particular case.

In the name of the Lord. Amen. It is a good thing and will be profitable for the public good that our treaties be made secure in a state of quiet and peace. Let it therefore be known to all that the men of the valley of Uri, and the commune [universitas] of the valley of Switz and the community [communitas] of the mountain men of the lower valley, considering the malice of the times and in order that they may better defend themselves and preserve themselves better in their rightful status, have promised in good faith to assist each other mutually with help and counsel both as regards persons and goods, within the valleys and beyond, in all they can and with all their efforts against all and singular who shall intend violence, molestation or injury against them or any one of them in persons and goods by contriving any ill whatsoever.

In every event whatsoever each commune [universitas] promises to come to the aid of the other at its own expense as need may be with all that may be necessary for their succour to resist the attacks of their enemies and to avenge their injuries. And concerning these things they have sworn their corporal oath without guile; renewing by this oath and these presents the ancient form of confederation. Nevertheless every man shall be held to be under his lord and shall serve him in seemly fashion according to his obligations [iuxta sui nominis conditionem].

Also by common consent and unanimous favour we promise, agree and ordain that in the aforesaid valleys we will not recognise nor accept in anywise any judge who shall have bought his office for a price whether in money or in any other way or who is not our native and fellow-countryman. If indeed dissension should arise between the confederates [conspiratos] the more prudent of the confederates are bound to intervene [debent accedere] to settle the difference between the parties as to them it shall seem expedient. And if one party should reject that ordinance the other confederates are bound to declare themselves against them.

Over and above all these things there is agreement that he who wrongfully and without cause shall have killed another, if he is arrested shall lose his life according to his deserts unless he can show his innocence of the said crime. And if he have departed the land he shall never be permitted to return. As for the receivers and protectors of the aforesaid malefactor they must be banished from the valleys until they are recalled by the confederates.

If any man either by day or in the silent night shall have wrongfully caused waste by fire to any of the confederates he shall never be held as a fellow countryman [pro conprovinciali]. And if any man shields and defends the said malefactor in the valleys he shall pay satisfaction for the damage done. And if any one of the confederates shall have spoiled another in his goods or shall have damaged him in any way, if the goods of the guilty can be found in the valleys they must be taken possession of in order to procure satisfaction to those injured according to justice.

Besides this no one ought to take a pledge of another unless he is manifestly a debtor or a surety and then it must be done by the permission of his own special judge. And besides this each man must obey his judge and if he need he must indicate the judge in the valley before whom he would rather appear in course of law. And if any one shall have rebelled against a judgment and by his contumacy shall have damaged any one of the confederates all the contracting parties [iurati] shall be bound to compel him to give satisfaction for the aforesaid contumacy.

If indeed war or discord shall have arisen between any of the confederates, if one party of the contestants [litigantium] refuses to receive satisfaction by the adjudgement of a composition, the confederates are bound to defend the other party.

All the above written things having been agreed upon for common utility and having been ordered in seemly wise, and since they are by the grace of God to endure perpetually, the present instrument has been drawn up in evidence thereof at the request of the above-named and it is fortified with the impression of the seals of the aforesaid three communes and valleys.

THE ACT OF UNION OF THE UNITED PROVINCES OF
THE NETHERLANDS. THE UNION OF UTRECHT.
23 JANUARY, 1579.

[Jean Dumont, "Corps Universel Diplomatique du Droit des Gens," Amsterdam, 1736, tom. v. pt. i. pp. 322-328. The version here given is translated from the French of Dumont and compared with the original Dutch. The Union of Utrecht was preceded by the federal union of Holland and Zealand, 25 April, 1576, the terms of which can be found in Pieter Bor, "Nederlantsche Beroerten," ix. fol. 138.]

As it is notorious, since the Pacification made at Ghent, by which the Provinces of the Netherlands were bound to succour one another with body and goods, and to expel the Spaniards and their adherents from the said country, that the said Spaniards, with Don John, and other Commanders and Captains, have sought in every manner (as they continue daily) to reduce the said Provinces, in general as well as in particular, under their tyranny, and by arms and other means to divide and dismember them, breaking the Union made by the said Pacification, to the total ruin of the said Countries; and as continuing in their said design, they have of late solicited some of the Towns and Quarters of the said Provinces, and have sought to make an irruption into the country of Gueldres.

Wherefore the people of the Duchy of Gueldres and County of Zutphen, of the Countries of Holland, Zealand, Utrecht, and the Frisian Ommelands between the rivers Ems and Lauwers, have thought it expedient and necessary to join and unite themselves more strictly together; not to abandon the Union made at the Pacification of Ghent, but the better to confirm it, and to provide themselves against all inconveniences into which they might fall by the practices, surprises and attempts of their enemies, and to see how they may preserve and defend themselves in such occurrences, and also to prevent any further division of the said Provinces and of the members thereof: the said Union and Pacification of Ghent remaining still in force.

Accordingly the Deputies of the said Provinces having sufficient authority for this purpose from their principals, have concluded and set down the points and articles which follow, provided always that they mean not in any way to estrange nor withdraw themselves from the Holy Roman Empire.

I. First, that the said Provinces make an alliance, confederation and union together, as by these presents they are allied, confederated and united together forever to remain in every way and manner as if all were but one single Province, and that they may never hereafter separate nor let themselves be separated, neither by Testament, Codicil, Donation, Cession, Exchange, Sale, Treaties of Peace or of Marriage, nor by any other occasion whatsoever; without any prejudice to the particular Privileges, Liberties, Exemptions, Rights, Statutes, praiseworthy and ancient Customs, Uses, and all other Rights which any of the said Provinces, Towns, Members and Inhabitants thereof may have. Wherein they will not only forbear to prejudice or occasion any hindrance to each other, but will assist each other in all ways, even with their lives and possessions, if there is need, to maintain and strengthen, and also to defend and maintain them against all men, whosoever they be, who shall seek to inflict upon them any actual breach thereof. It being understood that all such disputes as shall arise between the said Provinces, Members and Towns of this Union, touching their Privileges and Franchises, Exemptions, Rights, Statutes, praiseworthy and ancient Customs, Uses, or other Rights, shall be decided by the ordinary Court of Justice, or by arbiters or by some amicable arrangement, and that none of the other Countries, Provinces, Towns or Members (as long as both parties submit to the course of law) shall in any manner interfere, except by intercession tending to an Agreement.

II. That the said Provinces, in confirmation of the said Alliance and Union, shall be bound to aid and succour one another with all their possessions, shedding of their blood, and hazard of their lives against all attempts, and violence which shall be made against them under the name, or under pretext of the name, of the King of Spain or upon his part. . . .

III. That the said Provinces shall in like manner be obliged to succour and defend one another against all foreign or domestic Lords, Princes and Potentates, Countries, Towns or Members thereof, whether in general or particular, that would molest, hurt, or make war against them, in such wise that the assistance shall be decreed by the Generality of this Union after knowledge and according to the conditions of the case.

IV. And the better to assure the said Provinces, Towns and Members thereof against all violence: the Frontier Towns, and also others in case this be regarded necessary, in whatever Province they be, shall, by the advice and ordinance of these United Provinces, be fortified at the expense of the Towns and Province wherein they are situated, being assisted to the extent of one half by the Generality. But if it be found expedient to build any new forts, or to demolish any in the said Provinces, it shall be done at the charge of the Generality.

V. And to provide for the expenses entailed by the defence of the said Provinces, it has been agreed that throughout all the said United Provinces there shall be imposed and publicly farmed out from three months to three months, to those persons offering the most, certain excises on all sorts of wine, inland and foreign beer, upon the grinding of corn, upon salt, upon cloth of gold, silver, woollen cloth, upon cattle that shall be killed, upon all horses or oxen that shall be sold or exchanged, upon all goods that shall be subject to the great balance, and upon all other goods which by common consent shall be thought fit, according to the Ordinances which shall be set down : and that to the like end they shall employ the revenues of the King of Spain, the ordinary charges being deducted.

VI. The which means may be augmented or diminished according to the exigence of affairs, and will be furnished only to secure the common defence, and for purposes that the Generality shall be obliged to support, nor shall they be applied to any other use whatsoever.

VII. That the said Frontier Towns and all others where need shall require, shall be at all times bound to receive such Garrisons as the said United Provinces shall think fit, and shall order them to take by the advice of the Governor of the Province where a garrison is to be placed, and they shall not be allowed to refuse.

VIII.

[Temporary provision.]

IX. No Agreements, Treaties of Truce or of Peace, may be made, no war commenced, no imposts or contributions imposed concerning the generality of this Union, save by the common advice and consent of all the said Provinces, but in other things touching the conduct of this Confederation, and of that which depends thereon, they shall be guided by what is advised and resolved by the majority of votes of the Provinces comprised in this Union, which shall be collected as has been done hitherto in the Generality of the Estates, and that, provisionally, until it shall be otherwise decreed by the general consent of the Confederates. But if it so happen that in Treaties of Truce, Peace, War, or Contributions, these Provinces cannot agree together, the dispute shall be referred provisionally to the Stadtholders, who are at present in the said United Provinces, and they shall effect a compromise or give a decision as they shall find most reasonable. And if the said Stadtholders could not agree together, they shall call to assist [them] such impartial assessors and adjuncts as they please: and the parties [in contention] shall be bound to perform and maintain whatsoever is determined by the said Stadtholders.

X. That none of the said Provinces, Towns or Members thereof may make any Confederations or Alliances, with any neighbouring Princes or Countries, without the consent of these United Provinces and Confederates.

XI. It is agreed that if any neighbouring Princes, Noblemen, Countries or Towns should desire to join by Alliance and Confederation with these aforesaid Provinces, that they may be received and admitted by the advice and consent of them all.

XII. With regard to the Coinage, all the said Provinces shall conform to the currency and rate of Specie, according to Regulations which shall be drawn up at the first opportunity, so that one shall not be able to make alterations without another.

XIII. As for Religion, they of Holland and Zealand may please themselves, and with regard to the other Provinces of this Union, they may govern themselves in this matter according to the Religious Peace of the Archduke Matthias, Governor-General of the Netherlands. . . . Or else they may either in general or in particular, arrange such order as they would esteem most suitable for the peace of the Provinces, Towns, and particular Members, and for the preservation of everybody both Ecclesiastical and Civil, of his goods and privileges, and no other Province may give them any let or hindrance therein; with the reservation that everyone shall be allowed to remain free in his Religion, so that no one shall be traduced or examined on account of religion, in accordance with the Pacification of Ghent.

XIV., XV. [Temporary Provisions.]

XVI. And if it should happen (which God forbid) that any misunderstanding, quarrel or division should occur between the said Provinces, wherein they could not agree, the same, so far as it concerns one Province in particular, shall be determined by the other Provinces, or by those whom they should depute for that purpose. But if it concerns all the Provinces in general, it shall be determined by the Stadtholders of the Provinces, as it is stated in Article IX. They shall be bound to do justice to the parties, or to reconcile them within one month, or within a shorter time if the case so requires, after having been summoned by one or other of the Parties. And that which by the other Provinces or their Deputies, or by the said Stadtholders shall be decreed and pronounced, shall be accepted and accomplished, abolishing all other remedies at law, either by appeal, relief, revision, nullity or any other pretensions whatever.

XVII. That the said Provinces, Towns and Members thereof shall be careful not to offer any occasion of war or quarrel to any foreign Princes, Noblemen, Countries, or Towns. For the preventing thereof the said Provinces, Towns and Members thereof shall be bound to do good and speedy Justice equally to Foreigners as to their own inhabitants. And if any among them should fail therein, the rest of the Confederates shall seek by all convenient means to have it done, and that all abuses that might hinder them or stay the course of Justice, may be corrected and reformed, according to right and the Privileges and praiseworthy and ancient Customs of every one.

XVIII. [Temporary Provision.]

XIX. For the dealing with all occurrences and difficulties which may happen, the said Confederates shall be bound upon summons made unto them by such as have authority thereto, to appear in Utrecht, on the day appointed, in order to deliberate and to resolve on the said occurrences and difficulties, which shall be described in the Letters of Rescription, if the matter requires not to be kept secret, by common advice and consent or by a majority of votes, in the manner heretofore said, even if some might not appear. In which case those who appear may nevertheless proceed to the resolution of what they shall find suitable for the common good of these United Provinces. And that which hath been so decreed shall be accomplished, even by those who failed to appear, unless the matter be of very great importance and could suffer some delay. In which case summonses shall be issued again to those who have not appeared, to present themselves on a certain stated day, on pain of losing their vote for that occasion. And what shall then be resolved shall be binding and valid, even though some of the said Provinces have been absent. Yet those whom it may not suit to appear may lawfully send their advice in writing, which shall be duly regarded in the collection of the votes.

XX. And to this end all and every one of the said Confederates shall be bound to write to those who have the authority for the summoning, about all things that may occur, or that shall seem to them to tend to the good or evil of the said Provinces and Confederates, so that they may cause them to be called together.

XXI. And if there shall be any obscurity or ambiguity whereby there may grow any question or dispute, the interpretation thereof shall belong to the said Confederates, who by common advice and consent shall decree thereon as they shall think fit. And if they fail to agree among themselves, they shall have recourse to the Stadtholders of the Provinces in the manner stated previously.

XXII. In the same manner if it should be thought necessary to augment or diminish anything in the Articles of this Union, Confederation and Alliance, in any particular or clauses, it shall be done by the common advice and consent of the said Confederates and not otherwise.

XXIII. All which Points and Articles and each of them in particular, the said United Provinces have promised and do promise by these presents, to accomplish and entertain, and to cause to be accomplished and entertained, without allowing any opposition or contradiction directly in any manner. And if anything shall be done or attempted contrary to the honour thereof, they do declare it void and of no effect. They bind thereto themselves and all the inhabitants respectively of the said Provinces, Towns and Members thereof, the which in case of contravention may be in all places, and before all Judges and Jurisdictions, where they shall be found, seized and arrested for the accomplishment of these presents, and that which depends thereon, renouncing to that end all exceptions, graces, privileges, reliefs and generally all other benefits of law which contrary to these presents might in any way aid or serve them; and especially the law which says that a general renunciation is of no force, if not preceded by a special one.

XXIV. And for the greater corroboration, all the Stadt-holders of the said Provinces, who are in office at present or may be hereafter, together with all Magistrates and Chief Officers of each of the said Provinces, Towns and Members thereof, shall be bound to swear and take an oath, to keep and cause to be kept all the Points and Articles, and every one of them in particular, of this Union and Confederation.

XXV. In the same manner all companies of burgesses, fraternities and official bodies shall be bound to take the same oath, in each of the said Towns and Places of the said Union.

THE CONFEDERATION OF THE COLONIES OF NEW ENGLAND. 19 MAY, 1643.

[Frequently reprinted. An accessible version is to be found in John Winthrop's "History of New England, 1630-1649," in "Original Narratives of Early American History," ed. J. F. Jameson, New York, 1908, vol. ii. pp. 100-105.]

THE Articles of Confederation between the plantations under the government of the Massachusetts, the plantations under the government of New Plymouth, the plantations under the government of Connecticut and the government of New Haven, with the plantations in combination therewith :

WHEREAS we all came into these parts of America with one and the same end and aim, namely, to advance the Kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to enjoy the liberties of the Gospel in purity with peace : and whereas by our settling, by the wise providence of God, we are further dispersed upon the seacoasts and rivers than was at first intended, so that we cannot, according to our desire, with convenience communicate in one government and jurisdiction : and whereas we live encompassed with people of several nations and strange languages, which hereafter may prove injurious to us or our posterity ; and for as much as the natives have formerly committed sundry insolences and outrages upon several plantations of the English, and have of late combined themselves against us, and seeing by reason of the sad distractions in England (which they have heard of), and by which they know we are hindered both from that humble way of seeking advice, and reaping those comfortable fruits of protection, which at other times we might well expect ; we therefore do conceive it our bounden duty, without delay, to enter into a present consociation amongst ourselves for mutual help and strength in all future concernment, that, as in nation and religion, so in other respects, we be and continue one, according to the tenor and true meaning of the ensuing articles,—

I. Wherefore it is fully AGREED and CONCLUDED between the parties above named, and they jointly and severally do, by these presents, agree and conclude that they all be, and henceforth be called by the name of the UNITED COLONIES OF NEW ENGLAND.

II. These united colonies, for themselves and their posterities, do jointly and severally hereby enter into a firm and perpetual league of friendship and amity, for offence and defence, mutual advice and succour upon all just occasions, both for preserving and propagating the truth and liberties of the gospel, and for their own mutual safety and welfare.

III. It is further agreed, that the plantations which at present are, or hereafter shall be settled within the limits of the Massachusetts, shall be forever under the government of the Massachusetts, and shall have peculiar jurisdiction amongst themselves in all cases as an entire body ; and that Plymouth, Connecticut, and New Haven, shall each of them in all respects have like peculiar jurisdiction and government within their limits, and in reference to the plantations which are already settled, or shall hereafter be erected, and shall settle within any of their limits respectively ; provided that no other jurisdiction shall hereafter be taken in as a distinct head or member of this confederation, nor shall any other, either plantation or jurisdiction in present being, and not already in combination or under the jurisdiction of any of these confederates, be received by any of them : nor shall any two of these confederates join in one jurisdiction, without consent of the rest, which consent to be interpreted as in the sixth ensuing article is expressed.

IV. It is also by these confederates agreed, that the charge of all just wars, whether offensive or defensive, upon what part or member of this confederation soever they shall fall, shall, both in men and provisions and all other disbursements, be borne by all the parts of this confederation in different proportions, according to their different abilities, in manner following, viz. That the commissioners for each jurisdiction, from time to time as there shall be occasion, bring account and number of all the males in each plantation, or any way belonging to or under their several jurisdictions, of what quality or condition soever they be, from sixteen years old to sixty, being inhabitants there, and that according to the different numbers which from time to time shall be found in each jurisdiction upon a true and just account, the service of men and all charges of the war be borne by the poll; each jurisdiction or plantation being left to their own just course or custom of rating themselves and people according to their different estates, with due respect to their qualities and exemptions among themselves, though the confederation take no notice of any such privilege; and that, according to the different charge of each jurisdiction and plantation, the whole advantage of the war (if it please God so to bless their endeavours), whether it be in lands, goods or persons, shall be proportionably divided among the said confederates.

V. It is further agreed, that if any of these jurisdictions, or any plantation under or in combination with them, be invaded by any enemy whatsoever, upon notice and request of any three magistrates of that jurisdiction so invaded, the rest of the confederates, without any further notice or expostulation, shall forthwith send aid to the confederate in danger, but in different proportions, namely, the Massachusetts one hundred men sufficiently armed and provided for such a service and journey, and each of the rest forty-five men so armed and provided; or any less number, if less be required, according to this proportion. But if such a confederate in danger may be supplied by their next confederate, not exceeding the number hereby agreed, they may crave help thence, and seek no further for the present; the charge to be borne as in this article is expressed, and at their return to be victualled, and supplied with powder and shot, if there be need, for their journey, by that jurisdiction which employed or sent for them; but none of the jurisdictions to exceed these numbers till by a meeting of the commissioners for this confederation a greater aid appear necessary; and this proportion to continue till upon knowledge of the numbers in each jurisdiction, which shall be brought to the next meeting, some other proportion be ordered. But in any such case of sending men for present aid, whether before or after such order or alteration, it is agreed that at the meeting of the commissioners for this confederation, the cause of such war or invasion be duly considered, and if it appear that the fault lay in the party invaded, that then that jurisdiction or plantation make just satisfaction both to the invaders whom they have injured, and bear all the charge of the war themselves without requiring any allowance from the rest of the confederates towards the same. And further, that if any jurisdiction see any danger of an invasion approaching, and there be time for a meeting, that in such case three magistrates of that jurisdiction may summons a meeting at such convenient place as themselves shall think meet, to consider and provide against the threatened danger; provided when they are met, they may remove to what place they please: only while any of these four confederates have but three magistrates in their jurisdiction, a request or summons from any two of them shall be accounted of equal force with the three mentioned in both the clauses of this article, till there may be an increase of magistrates there.

VI. It is also agreed, that for the managing and concluding of all affairs peculiar to and concerning the whole confederation, commissioners shall be chosen by and out of each of these four jurisdictions, viz. two for the Massachusetts, two for Plymouth, two for Connecticut, and two for New Haven, all in church fellowship with us, which shall bring full power from their several general courts respectively, to hear, examine, weigh and determine all affairs of war or peace, leagues, aids, charges, and numbers of men for war, division of spoils, or whatever is gotten by conquest; receiving of more confederates or plantations into the combination with any of these confederates, and all things of like nature which are the proper concomitants or consequents of such a confederation for amity, offence and defence, not intermeddling with the government of any of the jurisdictions, which by the Third Article is preserved entirely to themselves. But if those eight commissioners, when they meet, shall not agree, yet it is concluded that any six of the eight, agreeing, shall have power to settle and determine the business in question ; but if six do not agree, that then such propositions, with their reasons, so far as they have been debated, be sent and referred to the four general courts, viz., the Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut and New Haven : and if at all the said general courts the business so referred be concluded, then to be prosecuted by the confederation and all their members. It is further agreed, that these eight commissioners shall meet once every year (besides extraordinary meetings according to the Fifth Article) to consider, treat, and conclude of all affairs belonging to this confederation, which meeting shall ever be the first Thursday in September and that the next meeting after the date of these presents (which shall be accounted the second meeting) shall be at Boston in the Massachusetts, the third at Hartford, the fourth at New Haven, the fifth at Plymouth, the sixth and seventh at Boston, and so in course successively, if in the meantime some middle place be not found out and agreed upon, which may be commodious for all the jurisdictions.

VII. It is further agreed, that at each meeting of these eight commissioners, whether ordinary or extraordinary, they all, or any six of them agreeing as before, may choose their president out of themselves, whose office and work shall be to take care and direct for order and a comely carrying on of all proceedings in their present meeting, but he shall be invested with no such power or respect, as by which he shall hinder the propounding or progress of any business, or any way cast the scales otherwise than in the preceding articles is agreed.

VIII. It is also agreed, that the commissioners for this confederation hereafter at their meetings, whether ordinary or extraordinary, as they may have commission or opportunity, do endeavour to frame and establish agreements and orders in general cases of a civil nature wherein all the plantations are interested for preserving peace amongst themselves, and preventing, as much as may be, all occasions of war or differences with others, as about free and speedy passage of justice in each jurisdiction to all the confederates equally, as to their own, receiving those that remove from one plantation to another without due certificates, how all the jurisdictions may carry it towards the Indians, that they neither grow insolent nor be injured without due satisfaction, lest war break in upon the confederates through miscarriages. It is also agreed, that if any servant run away from his master into any of these confederate jurisdictions, that in such case, upon certificate of one magistrate in the jurisdiction out of which the said servant fled, or upon other due proof, the said servant shall be delivered either to his master or any other that pursues and brings such certificate or proof : And that upon the escape of any prisoner or fugitive for any criminal cause, whether breaking prison or getting from the officer, or otherwise escaping, upon the certificate of two magistrates of the jurisdiction out of which the escape is made, that he was a prisoner or such an offender at the time of the escape, the magistrate, or some of them of the jurisdiction where for the present the said prisoner or fugitive abideth, shall forthwith grant such a warrant as the case will bear, for the apprehending of any such person and the delivery of him into the hand of the officer or other person who pursueth him ; and if there be help required for the safe returning of any such offender, then it shall be granted unto him that craves the same, he paying the charges thereof.

IX. And for that the justest wars may be of dangerous consequence, especially to the smaller plantations in these united colonies, it is agreed, that neither the Massachusetts, Plymouth, Connecticut, nor New Haven, nor any of the members of any of them, shall at any time hereafter begin, undertake, or engage themselves or this confederation, or any part thereof, in any war whatsoever, (sudden exigencies with the necessary consequences thereof excepted, which are also to be moderated as much as the case will permit,) without the consent and agreement of the aforementioned eight commissioners, or at least six of them, as in the sixth article is provided ; and that no charge be required of any of the confederates, in case of a defensive war, till the said and have agreed upon the sum of money to be levied, which sum is then to be paid by the several confederates in proportion according to the Fourth Article.

X. That in extraordinary occasions, when meetings are summoned by three magistrates of any jurisdiction, or two, as in the Fifth Article, if any of the commissioners come not, due warning being given or sent, it is agreed that four of the commissioners shall have power to direct a war which cannot be delayed, and to send for due proportions of men out of each jurisdiction, as well as six might do if all met; but not less than six shall determine the justice of the war, or allow the demands or bills of charges, or cause any levies to be made for the same.

XI. It is further agreed, that if any of the confederates shall hereafter break any of these present articles, or be other-way injurious to any one of the other jurisdictions, such breach of agreement or injury shall be duly considered and ordered by the commissioners for the other jurisdictions, that both peace, and this present confederation may be entirely preserved without violation.

XII. Lastly, this perpetual confederation, and the several articles and agreements thereof being read and seriously considered both by the general court for the Massachusetts and the commissioners for the other three, were subscribed presently by the commissioners, all save those of Plymouth, who, for want of sufficient commission from their general court, deferred their subscription till the next meeting, and then they subscribed also, and were to be allowed by the general courts of the several jurisdictions, which accordingly was done, and certified at the next meeting held at Boston, (7), 7, 1643.

THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE THIRTEEN AMERICAN COLONIES. 4 JULY, 1776.

America.*

WHEN, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of government. The history of the present king of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world. He has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good. He has forbidden his governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws, for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature—a right inestimable to them, and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the repository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved representative houses repeatedly for opposing, with manly firmness, his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused, for a long time after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large, for their exercise, the state remaining, in the mean time, exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without and convulsions within.

He has endeavoured to prevent the population of these states, for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

He has obstructed the administration of justice, by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance. He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies without the consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the military independent of, and superior to, the civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:—For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these states:—For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world:—

For imposing taxes on us without our consent:—For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury:—For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offences:—For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighbouring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries, so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these colonies:—For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering, fundamentally, the forms of our governments:—For suspending our own legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated government here, by declaring us out of his protection and waging war against us. He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation, and tyranny, already begun, with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow-citizens, taken captive on the high seas, to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavoured to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes, and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms: our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them, from time to time, of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them, by the ties of our common kindred, to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity which denounces our separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.

We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that, as free and independent states, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent states may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. 15 NOVEMBER, 1777.

[Jonathan Elliot, "Debates on the Federal Constitution," vol. i. pp. 79-84.]

To all to whom these Presents shall come, we, the undersigned, Delegates of the States affixed to our names, send greeting:

WHEREAS the delegates of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, did, on the fifteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven, and in the second year of the Independence of America, agree to certain articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the states of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, in the words following, viz. :—

Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

I. The style of this confederacy shall be, “The United States of America.”

II. Each state retains its sovereignty, freedom and independence, and every power, jurisdiction and right, which is not by this Confederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled.

III. The said states hereby severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defence, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare; binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to, or attacks made upon them, or any of them, on account of religion, sovereignty, trade or any other pretence whatever.

IV. The better to secure and perpetuate mutual friendship and intercourse among the people of the different states in this Union, the free inhabitants of each of these states—paupers, vagabonds and fugitives from justice, excepted—shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several states; and the people of each state shall have free ingress and regress to and from any other state, and shall enjoy therein all the privileges of trade and commerce, subject to the same duties, impositions and restrictions, as the inhabitants thereof, respectively, provided that such restrictions shall not extend so far as to prevent the removal of property imported into any state from any other state, of which the owner is an inhabitant; provided also, that no imposition, duty, or restriction, shall be laid by any state on the property of the United States, or either of them.

If any person, guilty of, or charged with, treason, felony, or other high misdemeanor, in any state, shall flee from justice, and be found in any of the United States, he shall, upon demand of the governor or executive power of the state from which he fled, be delivered up, and removed to the state having jurisdiction of his offence.

Full faith and credit shall be given, in each of these states, to the records, acts, and judicial proceedings, of the courts and magistrates of every other state.

V. For the more convenient management of the general interests of the United States, delegates shall be annually appointed in such manner as the legislature of each state shall direct, to meet in Congress on the first Monday in November, in every year, with a power reserved to each state to recall its delegates, or any of them, at any time within the year, and to send others in their stead for the remainder of the year.

No state shall be represented in Congress by less than two, nor by more than seven members; and no person shall be capable of being a delegate for more than three years in any term of six years; nor shall any person, being a delegate, be capable of holding any office under the United States, for which he, or another for his benefit, receives any salary, fees, or emolument of any kind.

Each state shall maintain its own delegates in a meeting of the states and while they act as members of the committee of the states.

In determining questions in the United States in Congress assembled, each state shall have one vote.

Freedom of speech and debate in Congress shall not be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Congress; and the members of Congress shall be protected in their persons from arrests and imprisonments during the time of their going to and from, and attendance on, Congress, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

VI. No state, without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, shall send any embassy to, or receive any embassy from, or enter into any conference, agreement, alliance, or treaty, with any king, prince or state; nor shall any person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States, or any of them, accept of any present, emolument, office or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state; nor shall the United States in Congress assembled, or any of them, grant any title of nobility.

No two or more states shall enter into any treaty, confederation, or alliance whatever between them, without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, specifying accurately the purposes for which the same is to be entered into, and how long it shall continue.

No state shall lay any imposts or duties, which may interfere with any stipulations in treaties entered into, by the United States in Congress assembled, with any king, prince, or state, in pursuance of any treaties already proposed by Congress to the courts of France and Spain. . . .

No state shall engage in any war without the consent of the United States in Congress assembled, unless such state be actually invaded by enemies, or shall have received certain advice of a resolution being formed by some nation of Indians to invade such state, and the danger is so imminent as not to admit of a delay till the United States in Congress assembled can be consulted ; . . .

VII. When land forces are raised by any state for the common defence, all officers of or under the rank of colonel shall be appointed by the legislature of each state, respectively, by whom such forces shall be raised, or in such manner as such state shall direct ; and all vacancies shall be filled up by the state which first made the appointment.

VIII. All charges of war, and all other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defence or general welfare, and allowed by the United States in Congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of a common treasury, which shall be supplied by the several states, in proportion to the value of all land, within each state, granted to or surveyed for any person, as such land, and the buildings and improvements thereon, shall be estimated according to such mode as the United States in Congress assembled shall, from time to time, direct and appoint.

The taxes for paying that proportion shall be laid and levied by the authority and direction of the legislatures of the several states, within the time agreed upon by the United States in Congress assembled.

IX. The United States in Congress assembled shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, except in the cases mentioned in the sixth article—of sending and receiving ambassadors—entering into treaties and alliances; provided that no treaty of commerce shall be made whereby the legislative power of the respective states shall be restrained from imposing such imposts and duties on foreigners as their own people are subjected to, or from prohibiting the exportation or importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever—of establishing rules for deciding, in all cases, what captures, on land or water, shall be legal, and in what manner prizes taken by land or naval forces in the service of the United States shall be divided or appropriated—of granting letters of marque and reprisal in times of peace—appointing courts for the trial of piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and establishing courts for receiving and determining finally appeals in all cases of capture; provided that no member of Congress shall be appointed a judge of any of the said courts.

The United States in Congress assembled shall also be the last resort on appeal in all disputes and differences now subsisting, or that hereafter may arise, between two or more states, concerning boundary, jurisdiction, or any other cause whatever; . . .

The United States in Congress assembled shall also have the sole and exclusive right and power of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their own authority, or by that of the respective states; fixing the standard of weights and measures throughout the United States; regulating the trade and managing all affairs with the Indians not members of any of the states, provided that the legislative right of any state within its own limits be not infringed or violated; establishing and regulating post-offices from one state to another throughout all the United States, and exacting such postage on the papers passing through the same as may be requisite to defray the expenses of the said office ; appointing all officers of the land forces in the service of the United States, excepting regimental officers ; appointing all the officers of the naval forces, and commissioning all officers whatever in the service of the United States ; making rules for the government and regulation of the said land and naval forces and directing their operations.

The United States in Congress assembled shall have authority to appoint a Committee to sit in the recess of Congress, to be denominated "a committee of the states," and to consist of one delegate from each state ; and to appoint such other committees and civil officers as may be necessary for managing the general affairs of the United States under their direction—to appoint one of their number to preside, provided that no person be allowed to serve in the office of president more than one year in any term of three years—to ascertain the necessary sums of money to be raised for the service of the United States, and to appropriate and apply the same for defraying the public expenses—to borrow money or emit bills on the credit of the United States, transmitting every half year, to the respective states, an account of the sums of money so borrowed or emitted—to build and equip a navy—to agree upon the number of land forces, and to make requisitions from each state for its quota, in proportion to the number of white inhabitants in such state ; which requisitions shall be binding ; and thereupon the legislature of each state shall appoint the regimental officers, raise the men, and clothe, arm and equip them in a soldier-like manner, at the expense of the United States ; and the officers and men so clothed, armed, and equipped, shall march to the place appointed, and within the time agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled : but if the United States in Congress assembled shall, on consideration of circumstances, judge proper that any state should not raise men, or should raise a smaller number than its quota, and that any other state should raise a greater number of men than the quota thereof, such extra number shall be raised, officered, clothed, armed, and equipped in the same manner as the quota of such state, unless the legislature of such state shall judge that such extra number cannot be safely spared out of the same ; in which case they shall raise, officer, clothe, arm, and equip, as many of such extra number as they judge can be safely spared. And the officers and men so clothed, armed, and equipped, shall march to the place appointed, and within the time agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled.

The United States in Congress assembled shall never engage in a war ; nor grant letters of marque and reprisal in time of peace ; nor enter into any treaties or alliances ; nor coin money ; nor regulate the value thereof, nor ascertain the sums and expenses necessary for the defence and welfare of the United States, or any of them ; nor emit bills ; nor borrow money on the credit of the United States ; nor appropriate money ; nor agree upon the number of vessels of war to be built or purchased, or the number of land or sea forces to be raised ; nor appoint a commander-in-chief of the army or navy,—unless nine states assent to the same ; nor shall a question on any other point, except for adjourning from day to day, be determined, unless by the votes of a majority of the United States in Congress assembled. . . .

X. The committee of the states, or any nine of them, shall be authorized to execute, in the recess of Congress, such of the powers of Congress as the United States in Congress assembled, by the consent of nine states, shall from time to time, think expedient to vest them with, provided that no power be delegated to the said committee, for the exercise of which, by the Articles of Confederation, the voice of nine states in the Congress of the United States assembled is requisite.

XI. Canada, acceding to this Confederation, and joining in the measures of the United States, shall be admitted into, and entitled to, all the advantages of this union ; but no other colony shall be admitted into the same unless such admission be agreed to by nine states.

XII. All bills of credit emitted, moneys borrowed, and debts contracted, by or under the authority of Congress, before the assembling of the United States in pursuance of the present Confederation, shall be deemed and considered as a charge against the United States, for payment and satisfaction whereof the said United States and the public faith are hereby solemnly pledged.

XIII. Every state shall abide by the determination of the United States in Congress assembled, on all questions which, by this Confederation, are submitted to them. And the articles of this Confederation shall be inviolably observed by every state, and the union shall be perpetual: nor shall any alteration, at any time hereafter, be made in any of them, unless such alteration be agreed to in a Congress of the United States, and be afterwards confirmed by the legislature of every state.

THE ANNAPOLIS RESOLUTIONS URGING THE SUM-
MONING OF A CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION
IN THE UNITED STATES. 14 SEPTEMBER, 1786.

[Jonathan Elliot, "Debates on the Federal Constitution," vol. i. pp. 117-118.]

The Annapolis Resolutions.

To the Honorable the Legislatures of Virginia, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York, the commissioners from the said states respectively, assembled at Annapolis, humbly beg leave to report—

That, pursuant to their several appointments, they met at Annapolis in the state of Maryland on the 11th day of September instant; and having proceeded to a communication of their powers, they found that the states of New York, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, had, in substance, and nearly in the same terms, authorized their respective commissioners "to meet such commissioners as were or might be appointed by the other states in the Union, at such time and place as should be agreed upon by the said commissioners, to take into consideration the trade and commerce of the United States; to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial intercourse and regulations might be necessary to their common interest and permanent harmony; and to report to the several states such an act relative to this great object as, when unanimously ratified by them, would enable the United States in Congress assembled effectually to provide for the same."

That the State of Delaware had given similar powers to their commissioners, with this difference only, that the act to be framed in virtue of these powers is required to be reported "to the United States in Congress assembled, to be agreed to by them, and confirmed by the legislatures of every state."

That the State of New Jersey had enlarged the object of their appointment, empowering their commissioners "to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial regulations and other important matters might be necessary to the common interest and permanent harmony of the several states," and to report such an act on the subject as, when ratified by them, "would enable the United States in Congress assembled effectually to provide for the exigencies of the Union."

That appointments of commissioners have also been made by the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and North Carolina, none of whom, however, have attended ; but that no information has been received by your commissioners, of any appointment having been made by the states of Connecticut, Maryland, South Carolina, or Georgia.

That the express terms of the powers to your commissioners supposing a deputation from all the states, and having for object the trade and commerce of the United States, your commissioners did not conceive it advisable to proceed on the business of their mission under the circumstances of so partial and defective a representation.

Deeply impressed, however, with the magnitude and importance of the object confided to them on this occasion, your commissioners cannot forbear to indulge an expression of their earnest and unanimous wish, that speedy measures may be taken to effect a general meeting of the states in a future convention, for the same and such other purposes as the situation of public affairs may be found to require.

If, in expressing this wish, or in intimating any other sentiment, your commissioners should seem to exceed the strict bounds of their appointment, they entertain a full confidence that a conduct dictated by an anxiety for the welfare of the United States will not fail to receive an indulgent construction.

In this persuasion your commissioners submit an opinion, that the idea of extending the powers of their deputies to other objects than those of commerce, which has been adopted by the state of New Jersey, was an improvement on the original plan, and will deserve to be incorporated into that of a future convention. They are the more naturally led to this conclusion, as, in the course of their reflections on the subject, they have been induced to think that the power of regulating trade is of such comprehensive extent, and will enter so far into the general system of the federal government, that, to give it efficacy, and to obviate questions and doubts concerning its precise nature and limits, may require a corresponding adjustment of other parts of the federal system.

That there are important defects in the system of the federal government is acknowledged by the acts of all those states which have concurred in the present meeting; that the defects upon a closer examination, may be found greater and more numerous than even these acts imply, is at least so far probable, from the embarrassments which characterize the present state of our national affairs, foreign and domestic, as may reasonably be supposed to merit a deliberate and candid discussion, in some mode which will unite the sentiments and councils of all the states. In the choice of the mode, your commissioners are of opinion that a convention of deputies from the different states, for the special and sole purpose of entering into this investigation, and digesting a plan for supplying such defects as may be discovered to exist, will be entitled to a preference, from considerations which will occur without being particularized.

Your commissioners decline an enumeration of those national circumstances on which their opinion respecting the propriety of a future convention with more enlarged powers is founded; as it would be a useless intrusion of facts and observations, most of which have been frequently the subject of public discussion, and none of which can have escaped the penetration of those to whom they would in this instance be addressed. They are, however, of a nature so serious, as, in the view of your commissioners, to render the situation of the United States delicate and critical, calling for an exertion of the united virtue and wisdom of all the members of the confederacy.

Under this impression, your commissioners, with the most respectful deference, beg leave to suggest their unanimous conviction, that it may essentially tend to advance the interests of the Union, if the states, by whom they have been respectively delegated, would themselves concur, and use their endeavours to procure the concurrence of the other states, in the appointment of commissioners, to meet at Philadelphia on the second Monday in May next, to take into consideration the situation of the United States, to devise such further provisions as shall appear to them necessary to render the constitution of the federal government adequate to the exigencies of the Union; and to report such an act for that purpose to the United States in Congress assembled, as, when agreed to by them, and afterwards confirmed by the legislatures of every state, will effectually provide for the same.

Though your commissioners could not with propriety address these observations and sentiments to any but the states they have the honor to represent, they have nevertheless concluded, from motives of respect, to transmit copies of this report to the United States in Congress assembled, and to the executive of the other states.

By order of the Commissioners. Dated at Annapolis, September 14, 1786.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. 17 SEPTEMBER, 1787.

[Jonathan Elliot, "Debates on the Federal Constitution," vol. i. pp. 1-21. The most accessible version of the Constitution, together with all its subsequent Amendments, is to be found in "Old South Leaflets," No. 1, published by The Old South Association, Boston, Mass.]

WE, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION I.

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SECTION II.

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained the age of twenty-five years, and been seven years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand, but each State shall have at least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five, and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the representation from any

State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers, and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

SECTION III.

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year; of the second class, at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class, at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two thirds of the members present.

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall, nevertheless, be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

SECTION IV.

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

SECTION V.

Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as each house may provide.

Each house may determine the rules of its proceeding, punish its members for disorderly behaviour, and with the concurrence of two thirds, expel a member.

Each house shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy, and the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question shall, at the desire of one fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

Neither house, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two houses shall be sitting.

SECTION VI.

The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall, in all cases except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either house they shall not be questioned in any other place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office.

SECTION VII.

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that house it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States ; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

SECTION VIII.

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States ; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States ;

To borrow money on the credit of the United States ;

To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes ;

To establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States ;

To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures ;

To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States ;

To establish post-offices and post-roads ;

To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries ;

To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court ;

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations ;

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water ;

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years ;

To provide and maintain a navy ;

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces ;

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions ;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress ;

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings ; and

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

SECTION IX.

The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation, not exceeding ten dollars for each person.

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another ; nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law ; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States ; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign State.

SECTION X.

No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation ; grant letters of marque and reprisal ; coin money ; emit bills of credit ; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts ; pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility.

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws ; and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States ; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION I.

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same term, be elected as follows :

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress ; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

[The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each ; which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed ; and if there be more than one who have such majority, and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by ballot one of them for President ; and if no person have a majority, then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like manner choose the President. But in choosing the President the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote ; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice-President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them by ballot the Vice-President.]¹

tors and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty-five years, and been fourteen years a resident within the United States.

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he may have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States or any of them.

Before he enter on the execution of his office he shall take the following oath or affirmation:

“I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.”

SECTION II.

The President shall be Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.

He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

SECTION III.

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

SECTION IV.

The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION I.

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

SECTION II.

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State, the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

SECTION III.

Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.

SECTION II.

The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

SECTION III.

New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

SECTION IV.

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), against domestic violence.

ARTICLE V.

The Congress, whenever two thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, provided that no amendments which may be made prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and eight shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI.

All debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

Done in convention by the unanimous consent of the States present, the seventeenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-seven, and of the independence of the United States of America the twelfth. In witness whereof, we have hereunto subscribed our names.

FEDERAL PACT BETWEEN THE TWENTY-TWO CANTONS OF SWITZERLAND. 7 AUGUST, 1815.

PACTE FÉDÉRAL

ENTRE

LES XXII CANTONS DE LA SUISSE

(DU 7 AOÛT 1815.)

AU NOM DU TOUT-POUISSANT!

LES XXII Cantons souverains de la Suisse, savoir : Zurich, Berne, Lucerne, Ury, Schwytz, Unterwalden, Glaris, Zug, Fribourg, Soleure, Bâle, Schaffhouse, Appenzell des deux Rhodes, St. Gall, Grisons, Argovie, Thurgovie, Tessin, Vaud, Valais, Neuchâtel et Genève, se réunissent, par le présent Pacte fédéral, pour leur sûreté commune, pour la conservation de leur liberté et de leur indépendance contre toute attaque de la part de l'étranger, ainsi que pour le maintien de l'ordre et de la tranquillité dans l'intérieur. Ils se garantissent réciproquement leurs constitutions telles qu'elles auront été statuées par l'Autorité suprême de chaque Canton, conformément aux principes du Pacte fédéral. Ils se garantissent de même réciproquement leur territoire.

Pour assurer l'effet de cette garantie et pour soutenir efficacement la neutralité de la Suisse, un contingent de troupes sera formé des hommes de chaque Canton habiles au service militaire, dans la proportion de deux soldats sur cent ames. Ces troupes seront fournies par les Cantons comme suit :—

Zurich	3,858 hommes
Berne	4,584 „
Lucerne	1,734 „
Ury	236 „
Schaffytz	602 „

Valais	1,280 „
Neuchâtel	1,000 „
Genève	600 „

Total : 32,886 hommes.

Cette échelle est adoptée provisoirement ; on en fera la révision à la première Diète ordinaire, d'après la base de population indiquée ci-dessus.

Les contingens en argent pour les frais de guerre et autres dépenses générales de la Confédération, seront payés par les Cantons dans la proportion suivante :

Zurich	francs	77,153
Berne	„	91,695
Lucerne	„	26,016
Ury	„	1,184

Valais	„	9,600
Neuchâtel	„	25,000
Genève	„	15,000

Total francs 540,107

Cette échelle de proportion devra également être revue et rectifiée par la prochaine Diète ordinaire, qui aura égard, autant que possible, aux réclamations formées par quelques Cantons. Une révision semblable aura lieu dans la suite, ainsi que pour les contingens de troupes, tous les vingt ans.

Une caisse militaire fédérale, dont les fonds doivent s'élever jusques au double du contingent d'argent, sera en outre formée pour subvenir aux dépenses de guerre.

Cette caisse doit être exclusivement employée au paiement des frais de guerre, lorsque la Confédération ordonne une levée de troupes ; le cas échéant, la moitié des dépenses sera payée au moyen de la perception d'un contingent d'argent, selon l'échelle de proportion, et l'autre moitié sera prise dans la caisse de guerre.

Pour former cette caisse, il sera établi un droit d'entrée sur les marchandises qui ne sont pas des objets de première nécessité.

Les Cantons frontières perçoivent ces droits et en rendent compte chaque année à la Diète.

La Diète fixe le tarif et règle le mode de comptabilité. Elle fait les dispositions nécessaires pour la conservation des fonds de la caisse de guerre.

En cas de danger extérieur ou intérieur, chaque Canton a le droit d'avertir ses co-états de se tenir prêts à lui fournir l'assistance fédérale.

Des troubles venant à éclater dans l'intérieur d'un Canton, le gouvernement peut appeler d'autres Cantons à son secours, en ayant soin toutefois d'en informer aussitôt le Directoire fédéral (Vorort). Si le danger continue, la Diète, sur la demande du gouvernement, prendra les déterminations ultérieures.

Dans le cas d'un danger subit, provenant du dehors, le Canton menacé peut requérir le secours d'autres Cantons; mais il en donnera immédiatement connaissance au Directoire fédéral (Vorort). Celui-ci doit alors convoquer la Diète, à laquelle il appartient de faire toutes les dispositions que la sûreté de la Confédération exige.

Le Canton ou les Cantons requis ont l'obligation de prêter secours au Canton requérant.

Dans le cas de danger extérieur, les frais sont supportés par la Confédération; ils sont à la charge du Canton réquérant, s'il s'agit de réprimer des troubles intérieurs, à moins que la Diète, dans des circonstances particulières, ne prenne une détermination différente.

Toutes les prétentions et contestations qui s'élèveraient entre les Cantons sur des objets non compris dans la garantie du Pacte fédéral, seront soumises au droit confédéral. La manière de procéder et la forme de droit sont réglées de la manière suivante :

Chacune des parties choisit parmi les magistrats d'autres Cantons deux arbitres, ou, si elles en sont d'accord, un seul arbitre.

Si le différend existe entre plus de deux Cantons, chaque partie choisira le nombre d'arbitres déterminé.

Ces arbitres réunis cherchent à terminer le différend à l'amiable et par les voies de conciliation.

S'ils ne peuvent y parvenir, les arbitres choisiront un sur-arbitre parmi les magistrats d'un Canton impartial dans l'affaire, et auquel ni l'un ni l'autre des arbitres déjà nommés ne doit appartenir.

Si les arbitres ne peuvent s'accorder sur le choix d'un sur-arbitre, et que l'un des Cantons vienne à s'en plaindre, le sur-arbitre est nommé par la Diète ; mais, dans ce cas, les Cantons qui sont en différend n'ont pas droit de voter. Le sur-arbitre et les arbitres essaient encore de concilier le différend, ou bien, si les parties s'en remettent à eux, ils décident par compromis.

Aucun des deux cas ci-dessus n'échéant, ils prononcent définitivement sur la contestation, selon droit.

Il ne peut être interjeté appel de cette sentence, et la Diète, en cas de besoin, la fait exécuter.

La question des frais, savoir les déboursés des arbitres et du sur-arbitre, doit être décidée en même tems que la question principale.

Les arbitres et sur-arbitres, nommés d'après les dispositions ci-dessus, seront déliés par leur gouvernement, pour le différend dont il s'agit, du serment qu'ils ont prêté à leur Canton.

Dans les différends quelconques qui viendraient à s'élever entre les Cantons, ceux-ci s'abstiendront de toutes voies de fait, à plus forte raison de l'emploi des armes ; ils suivront exactement la ligne de droit tracée dans le présent article, et se conformeront en tout à la décision rendue.

Les Cantons ne peuvent former entre eux de liaisons préjudiciables au Pacte fédéral, ni aux droits d'autres Cantons.

La Confédération consacre le principe, que comme, après la reconnaissance des XXII Cantons, il n'existe plus en Suisse de pays sujets, de même aussi la jouissance des droits politiques ne peut jamais, dans aucun Canton, être un privilège exclusif en faveur d'une classe des citoyens.

La Diète, à laquelle les Cantons souverains ont remis les affaires générales de la Confédération, les dirige d'après les dispositions du Pacte fédéral. Elle est composée des députés des XXII Cantons, qui votent d'après les instructions de leurs gouvernemens. Chaque Canton a une voix. Elle se rassemble au chef-lieu du Directoire fédéral (Vorort), en session ordinaire toutes les années, le premier lundi de juillet ; en session extraordinaire, lorsque le Directoire la convoque, on sur la demande de cinq Cantons.

La Diète déclare la guerre et conclut la paix. Elle seule fait des alliances avec les puissances étrangères ; mais, pour ces décisions importantes, les trois quarts des voix sont nécessaires. Dans toutes les autres affaires, qui sont remises à la Diète par le présent Pacte fédéral, la majorité absolue décide.

Les traités de commerce sont conclus par la Diète.

Les Cantons peuvent traiter en particulier avec des gouvernemens étrangers, pour des capitulations militaires, ainsi que pour des objets économiques et de police ; mais ces conventions ne doivent blesser en rien ni le Pacte fédéral, ni des alliances existantes, ni les droits constitutionnels d'autres Cantons. A cet effet, elles seront portées à la connaissance de la Diète.

Les Envoyés diplomatiques de la Confédération, lorsque de telles missions sont jugées nécessaires, sont nommés et révoqués par la Diète.

La Diète prend toutes les mesures nécessaires pour la sûreté intérieure et extérieure de la Suisse ; elle règle l'organisation des troupes de contingent, les appelle en activité, détermine leur emploi, nomme le général, l'état-major général et les colonels de la Confédération ; elle ordonne, d'intelligence avec les gouvernemens cantonaux, l'inspection nécessaire sur la formation, l'armement et l'équipement du contingent militaire.

Dans des circonstances extraordinaires, la Diète, lorsqu'elle ne reste pas en permanence, peut déléguer des pouvoirs particuliers au Directoire fédéral (Vorort). Elle peut également, pour des objets d'une haute importance, adjoindre à l'Autorité du Vorort, spécialement chargée de la gestion des affaires fédérales, des représentans de la Confédération ; dans l'un et l'autre cas, deux tiers des voix sont nécessaires.

Les représentans fédéraux sont nommés par les Cantons, lesquels alternent entre eux pour cette nomination dans les six classes suivantes :

Les deux Cantons directeurs¹ qui ne sont pas en charge, nomment tour-à-tour le premier représentant ;

Uri, Schwytz, Unterwalden, le second ;

Glaris, Zug, Appenzell, Schaffhouse, le troisième ;

Fribourg, Bâle, Soleure, Valais, le quatrième ;

Grisons, St. Gall, Argovie, Neuchâtel, le cinquième.

Vaud, Thurgovie, Tessin, Genève, le sixième.

La Diète donne aux représentans de la Confédération les instructions nécessaires, et détermine la durée de leurs fonctions. Dans tous les cas, ces dernières doivent expirer à une nouvelle réunion de la Diète. Les représentans sont indemnisés par la caisse centrale.

Lorsque la Diète n'est pas réunie, la direction des affaires générales est confiée au Directoire fédéral (Vorort), avec les mêmes attributions que celles qu'il exerçait avant l'année 1798.

Le Directoire alterne de deux en deux ans, entre les Cantons de Zurich, Berne, et Lucerne. Ce tour de rôle a commencé le 1^{er} janvier 1815.

Il y aura auprès du Canton directeur une Chancellerie fédérale, composée d'un Chancelier et d'un Secrétaire d'Etat, lesquels sont nommés par la Diète.

ces mêmes objets, ainsi que du bétail, sont garantis, sauf les mesures de police nécessaires pour prévenir le monopole usuraire et l'accaparement. Ces mesures de police doivent être les mêmes pour les ressortissans du Canton et pour les autres Suisses.

Les péages, droits de route et de pontonnage actuellement existans et approuvés par la Diète, sont conservés. On ne pourra, sans l'approbation de la Diète, ni en établir de nouveaux, ni hausser ceux qui subsistent, ni prolonger leur durée, s'ils ont été accordés pour un tems déterminé.

Les droits de traité d'un Canton à l'autre sont abolis.

L'existence des couvens et chapitres et la conservation de leurs propriétés, en tant que cela dépend des gouvernemens des Cantons, sont garanties. Ces biens sont sujets aux impôts et contributions publiques, comme toute autre propriété particulière.

§ 13.

La dette nationale helvétique, fixée, le 1^{er} novembre 1804, au capital de trois millions, cent dix-huit mille trois cent trente-six francs, demeure reconnue.

§ 14.

Les concordats et conventions conclus entre les Cantons depuis l'an 1803, lesquels ne sont pas contraires aux principes du présent Pacte fédéral, restent dans leur état actuel. Quant aux décrets rendus par la Diète durant le même tems, on les réunira dans une collection, pour les présenter, en 1816, à la révision de la Diète, que décidera lesquels doivent continuer d'être obligatoires.

§ 15.

Le présent Pacte fédéral, ainsi que les constitutions cantonales, seront déposés dans l'archive de la Confédération.

Les XXII Cantons se constituent en Confédération suisse ; ils déclarent qu'ils entrent librement et de bon gré dans cette alliance, qu'ils l'observeront fidèlement, dans toutes les circonstances, en frères et confédérés; en particulier qu'ils rempliront dès à présent, les uns envers les autres, tous les devoirs et toutes les obligations qui en résultent; et afin qu'un acte aussi important pour le salut de la patrie commune reçoive, selon l'usage de nos pères, une sanction religieuse, ce Pacte fédéral sera non-seulement signé par les Députés de chaque État autorisés à cet effet, et muni de nouveau sceau de la Confédération, mais encore confirmé et corroboré par un serment solennel au Dieu tout-puissant.

Ainsi fait, signé et scellé par Messieurs les Députés et Conseillers de légation des États confédérés ci-après nommés, à Zurich, le septième août de l'an de grâce mil huit cent et quinze (7 août 1815).

EARL GREY'S DESPATCHES CONCERNING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT IN NOVA SCOTIA. 3 NOVEMBER, 1846, AND 31 MARCH, 1847.

[“Parliamentary Papers,” vol. 42, 1847-48.]

Earl Grey [Secretary of State for the Colonies], to Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Harvey, K.C.B. [Lieut.-Gov. of Nova Scotia].

DOWNING STREET,
3 November, 1846.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 15th September, marked “Private and Confidential,” in which you communicate to me your views upon the state of affairs which you have found on arriving in Nova Scotia.

Circumstances prevented me from answering your despatch, as you wished me to have done, by the packet which left England on the 3d instant; but the interval which has since elapsed has enabled me to devote more time to the consideration of the questions which you have brought under my notice than the brief space between the arrival and the departure of the North American packet would have allowed me to do.

I perceive, from your representation of the position of affairs in Nova Scotia, that there are questions to be determined in respect to the government of that province of no ordinary difficulty, and that it is of the utmost importance that the first measures of your administration should be preceded by the most careful deliberation. The knowledge which I possess of the local politics of Nova Scotia is at present too limited to enable me, with confidence in my own judgment, to give you any positive and detailed directions as to the course which circumstances may require you to adopt in the present conjuncture;

but though it is out of my power to give you such instructions, there are certain general principles which ought, as I conceive, to govern your conduct in this and in similar cases; and which, as they admit of being stated, ought, I think, to be communicated to you for your guidance.

I shall advert first to the important topic of the composition of the Legislative Council. In making appointments to this body, it ought undoubtedly to be the object of the administrator of the Government so to compose it as to make it fairly represent the opinion of the majority of the intelligent members of the community; but supposing the selection of the present members to have been ill-advised, and that the Council in consequence is not in harmony with public opinion, the question arises, what is then the proper course to be adopted? Under such circumstances there are two considerations to which it is necessary to advert. First, that it is impossible to allow the Legislative Council to obstruct permanently the passing of measures called for by public opinion, and sent up by the popular branch of the Legislature. Secondly, that it is a serious evil to be compelled to make an addition to the members of this body for the purpose of changing the character of the majority; since each such addition creates both a precedent and a necessity for a similar and perhaps larger addition whenever a change in public feeling gives the ascendancy to a new party in the assembly. It is difficult to reconcile these almost conflicting considerations, but this, in my opinion, may be attempted with the greatest hopes of success, by adopting as a rule that an addition is not to be made to the Legislative Council with a view to changing the character of the majority, except under circumstances of clear and obvious necessity. An anticipation that public business will be impeded because there is a majority in the Legislative Council attached to the political party which has not the confidence of the colony is insufficient to justify the appointment of additional members. Practical inconvenience must have actually arisen, and to a serious extent, before resort can with propriety be had to any measure for increasing the number of the Council. If that body be found obstructing pertinaciously the progress of public business, and the passing of laws which public opinion demands, an addition to it will then be felt to be a just and necessary measure, and would not excite the same indignation, on the part even of those against whom it might be directed, as would be the case if adopted on lighter grounds ; while the probability is that the members of the Legislative Council, knowing that if it should become necessary this measure must ultimately be resorted to, will shrink from creating the necessity by obstinately opposing themselves to the real opinion of the intelligent classes of the community.

I come now to the second question which you have submitted to me in your Despatch, namely, the propriety of dissolving the present House of Assembly.

I am of opinion that under all the circumstances of the case, the best course for you to adopt is to call upon the members of your present Executive Council to propose to you the names of the gentlemen whom they would recommend to supply the vacancies, which I understand to exist, in the present Board. If they should be successful in submitting to you an arrangement to which no valid objection arises, you will of course continue to carry on the government through them, so long as it may be possible to do so satisfactorily, and as they possess the necessary support from the Legislature. Should the present Council fail in proposing to you an arrangement which it would be proper for you to accept, it would then be your natural course, in conformity with the practice in analogous cases in this country, to apply to the opposite party, and should you be able, through their assistance, to form a satisfactory Council, there will be no impropriety in dissolving the Assembly upon their advice ; such a measure, under those circumstances, being the only mode of escaping from the difficulty which would otherwise exist of carrying on the government of the province upon the principles of the constitution.

The object with which I recommend to you this course, is that of making it apparent that any transfer which may take place of political power from the hands of one party in the province to those of another is the result not of an act of yours but of the wishes of the people themselves, as shown by the difficulty experienced by the retiring party in carrying on the government of the province according to the forms of the constitution. To this I attach great importance; I have therefore to instruct you to abstain from changing your Executive Council until it shall become perfectly clear that they are unable, with such fair support from yourself as they have a right to expect, to carry on the government of the province satisfactorily, and command the confidence of the Legislature.

Of whatsoever party your Council may be composed, it will be your duty to act strictly upon the principle you have yourself laid down in the memorandum delivered to the gentlemen with whom you have communicated, that, namely, "of not identifying yourself with any one party," but instead of this, "making yourself both a mediator and a moderator between the influential of all parties." In giving, therefore, all fair and proper support to your Council for the time being, you will carefully avoid any acts which can possibly be supposed to imply the slightest personal objection to their opponents, and also refuse to assent to any measures which may be proposed to you by your Council which may appear to you to involve an improper exercise of the authority of the Crown for party rather than for public objects. In exercising, however, this power of refusing to sanction measures which may be submitted to you by your Council, you must recollect that this power of imposing a check upon extreme measures proposed by the party for the time in the government, depends entirely for its efficacy upon its being used sparingly, and with the greatest possible discretion. A refusal to accept advice tendered to you by your Council is a legitimate ground for its members to tender to you their resignation, a course they would doubtless adopt should they feel that the subject on which a difference had arisen between you and themselves was one upon which public opinion would be in their favour. Should it prove to be so, concession to their views must, sooner or later, become inevitable, since it cannot be too distinctly acknowledged that it is neither possible nor desirable to carry on the government of any of the British provinces in North America in opposition to the opinion of the inhabitants.

Clearly understanding, therefore, that refusing to accede to the advice of your Council for the time being upon a point on which they consider it their duty to insist, must lead to the question at issue being brought ultimately under the decision of public opinion, you will carefully avoid allowing any matter not of very grave concern, or upon which you cannot reasonably calculate upon being in the end supported by that opinion, to be made the subject of such a difference. And if, unfortunately, such a difference should arise, you will take equal care that its cause and the grounds of your own decision are made clearly to appear in written documents capable of being publicly quoted.

The adoption of this principle of action by no means involves the necessity of a blind obedience to the wishes and opinions of the members of your Council ; on the contrary, I have no doubt that if they see clearly that your conduct is guided, not by personal favour to any particular men or party, but by a sincere desire to promote the public good, your objections to any measures proposed will have great weight with the Council, or should they prove unreasonable, with the Assembly, or, in last resort, with the public.

Such are the general principles upon which the constitutions granted to the North American Colonies render it necessary that their government should be conducted. It is, however, I am well aware, far easier to lay down these general principles than to determine in any particular case what is that line of conduct which an adherence to them should prescribe. In this your own judgment and a careful consideration of the circumstances in which you are placed must be your guide ; and I have only, in conclusion, to assure you that Her Majesty will always be anxious to put the most favourable construction upon your conduct in the discharge of the arduous duties imposed upon you by the high situation you hold in Her service.

Earl Grey to Lieut.-Governor Sir John Harvey, K.C.B.

DOWNING STREET,

SIR,

I have already acknowledged the receipt of your Despatch of the 2nd February, enclosing two letters to yourself from your Executive Council, and I now propose to communicate the conclusions at which I have arrived after that attentive consideration which I have felt due, as well to the intrinsic merits of the views stated by your advisers, as to the respectable source from which the statement emanates.

In doing so, it will be convenient that I should at the same time advert to the correspondence which, soon after your assumption of the government of Nova Scotia, you had with Mr. Howe and his friends.

Upon a careful comparison of these very able papers, in which the members of your Council and their political opponents have stated their respective views as to the manner in which the Executive Government of Nova Scotia ought to be conducted, I am led to the conclusion that there is not in reality so wide a difference of principle between the conflicting parties as would at first sight appear to exist, and that it may not be impossible to chalk out a system of administration to be hereafter adopted, to which, without the slightest sacrifice of consistency, both might assent.

On the one hand, I find that the members of your Council declare that they "desire in no degree to weaken the responsibility of the Provincial Government to the Legislature," and I gather from the general tenor of their papers of the 28th and 30th of January, that they are aware that, in the present state of affairs, and of public opinion in Nova Scotia, it is necessary that the Governor of the province should, in administering its affairs, have the advice and assistance of those who can command the confidence of the Legislature, and more especially of that branch of the Legislature which directly represents the people.

On the other hand, I can hardly doubt that the gentlemen of the opposite party who have insisted so strongly upon the necessity of what is termed "responsible government," would admit the justness and importance of many of the arguments which have been used, in order to show the danger and inconvenience of making the general tenure of offices in the colonial service to depend upon the fluctuations of political contests in the Assembly. I am the more convinced that the gentlemen of the opposition will recognise the force of these arguments, because I observe in the various papers in which they have stated their views, frequent references, either direct or implied, to the practice of this country, as that which affords the best model for imitation in laying down rules as to the manner in which the government of Nova Scotia should be carried on. Now there is scarcely any part of the system of government in this country which I consider of greater value than that, which though not enforced by any written law, but deriving its authority from usage and public opinion, makes the tenure of the great majority of officers in the public service to depend upon good behaviour. Although, with the exception of those who hold the higher judicial situations, or situations in which judicial independence has been considered to be necessary, the whole body of public servants in the United Kingdom hold their offices technically during the pleasure of the Crown, in practice, all but the very small proportion of offices which are distinguished as political, are held independently of party changes, nor are those who have once been appointed to them ever in point of fact removed, except in consequence of very obvious misconduct or unfitness. Thus, in fact, though the legal tenure, "during good behaviour," is rare, tenure during good behaviour, in the popular sense of the term, may be said to be the general rule of our public service.

The exception is in the case of those high public servants whom it is necessary to invest with such discretion as really to leave in their hands the whole direction of the policy of the empire in all its various departments. Such power must, with a representative government, be subject to constant control by Parliament, and is therefore administered only by such persons as from time to time enjoy the confidence of Parliament as well as of the Crown. These heads of departments, or Ministers, together with their immediate subordinates who are required to represent or support them in Parliament, are almost invariably members of one or other House, and hold their offices only as long as they enjoy the confidence of Parliament.

Though it is not without some inconveniences, I regard this system as possessing upon the whole very great advantages. We owe to it that the public servants of this country, as a body, are remarkable for their experience and knowledge of public affairs, and honourably distinguished by the zeal and integrity with which they discharge their duties, without reference to party feeling; we owe to it also, that as the transfer of power from one party in the State to another is followed by no change in the holders of any but a few of the highest offices, political animosities are not in general carried to the same height, and do not so deeply agitate the whole frame of society as in those countries in which a different practice prevails. The system, with regard to the tenure of office, which has been found to work so well here, seems well worthy of imitation in the British American Colonies, and the small population and limited revenue of Nova Scotia, as well as the general occupation and social state of the community, are, in my opinion, additional reasons for abstaining, so far as regards that province, from going further than can be avoided, without giving up the principle of executive responsibility, in making the tenure of offices in the public service dependent upon the result of party contests. In order to keep the Executive Government in harmony with the Legislature, it is doubtless necessary that the direction of the internal policy of the colony should be entrusted to those who enjoy the confidence of the Provincial Parliament, but it is of great moment not to carry the practice of changing public officers further than is absolutely necessary for the attainment of that end, lest the administration of public affairs should be deranged by increasing the bitterness of party spirit, and subjecting the whole machinery of Government to perpetual change and uncertainty.

In the practical application of these views, there will, I am aware, be room for considerable difference of opinion.

In this, as in all questions of classification, varying circumstances and the various views taken by different men, will give rise to discussions and occasional alterations with respect to particular offices. Your acquaintance with what has passed, and is passing in the mother country, will suggest to you instances in which the question has been raised, whether a particular office should or should not be a Parliamentary office ; and some in which different offices have been deliberately removed from the one into the other class.

The question how many of the public officers in Nova Scotia ought to be regarded as political, is one to be determined on the general principles I have before laid down, and with reference to various considerations arising from the peculiar exigencies of the public service, and the finances and social state of the colony. The practical end of responsible government would be satisfied by the removability of a single public officer, provided that through him public opinion could influence the general administration of affairs. Without quite assenting to the too modest estimate which your present Council have given of the resources of the province, I admit that the smallness of the community, its want of wealth, and the comparative deficiency of a class possessing leisure and independent incomes, preclude it from, at present, enjoying a very perfect division of public employments. Small and poor communities must be content to have their work cheaply and somewhat roughly done. Of the present members of your Council, the Attorney-general and Provincial Secretary, to whom the Solicitor-general should perhaps be added, appear to me sufficient to constitute the responsible advisers of the Governor. The holders of these offices should henceforth regard them as held on a political tenure. And, with a view to that end, the Provincial Secretary should be prepared, in the event of any change, to disconnect from his office that of the clerkship of the Council, which seems to be one that should on every account be held on a more permanent tenure.

It is possible that in the event of any change being rendered necessary by the course of events in the Provincial Parliament, the party succeeding to power might insist on increasing this number of political offices, by adding to the list of those to be so regarded. In case such a question should arise, I must leave it to your discretion, on a view of various local and temporary circumstances, which I am unable at present to appreciate, to form your own decision with respect to any such demand. I should feel no objection to somewhat increasing the number of political offices (for instance, by appointing a financial Secretary and a responsible Chief of the Department of Public Lands and Works), should the expense of doing so, without injustice to those now in the public service, be found to be not more than the colonial revenue would conveniently bear. But I rely on your using your influence to resist that disposition, which a party succeeding to power often exhibits, to throw open the various offices of emolument to their friends, without sufficient regard to the mischiefs thereby permanently entailed on the public service. And it is but due to what I have seen of the conduct of the principal advocates of responsible government in Nova Scotia, to express my reliance on their public spirit and sober estimate of their country's position and interests, as the most effectual safeguard against any abuse of power.

There is another safeguard which, even with the less considerate members of any party, you will, I think, find sufficient to protect the public interests against any great disposition unnecessarily to place offices hitherto held on what has practically been a tenure of good behaviour, on one of a more precarious nature. However desirous the people of Nova Scotia may be to establish the principle of responsible government, they would, I feel assured, shrink from effecting any reform, however just or necessary, at the cost of injustice to individuals. Now, when individuals have engaged in the public service under a belief, sanctioned by custom, that they obtained a tenure of their offices during good behaviour, it would be most unjust to change that tenure to one of dependence on a Parliamentary majority, without ensuring them a provision that would make up for the loss of official income. I think that the consideration that the improvement grasping at any particular office would necessitate the provision of an adequate pension for its occupant, will be a salutary check on any disposition to carry party government beyond its just limits.

This condition must be applied to the removal of those public officers who now have seats in your Executive Council, unless where they have clearly accepted office on an understanding to the contrary effect. I cannot suppose that the necessity of providing the requisite pensions will be deemed by the Assembly an unreasonable accompaniment of the establishment of parliamentary government. And hereafter I think it would be proper to recognise as an invariable rule, that no person should without such provision be deprived of any office (except upon the ground of unfitness or misconduct), unless he had accepted it on the distinct understanding that it was to be held virtually, as well as nominally, during pleasure.

I entertain a strong conviction that the adoption of such a rule will be found conducive not only to the interests of the holders of offices, but also to those of the public, and to a true economy of the public money. As I have already observed, it is impossible to expect that men of superior capacity will devote themselves to the public service unless they are assured that their employment will be permanent, or are offered emoluments so large as to make up for the uncertainty of the tenure by which they are enjoyed. If the emoluments of public employments are small, and its tenure at the same time uncertain, a strong temptation is given to the holders to endeavour to make up for these disadvantages by irregular gains, and thus to give rise to practices equally injurious to the community in a pecuniary and in a moral point of view.

You will observe that, in the preceding observations, I have assumed that those only of the public servants, who are to be regarded as removable on losing the confidence of the Legislature, are to be members of the Executive Council. This I consider to follow from the principles I have laid down. Those public servants, who hold their offices permanently, must upon that very ground be regarded as subordinate, and ought not to be members of either house of the Legislature, by which they would necessarily be more or less mixed up in party struggles; and, on the other hand, those who are to have the general direction of affairs exercise that function by virtue of their responsibility to the Legislature, which implies their being removable from office, and also that they should be members either of the Assembly or of the Legislative Council. But this general direction of affairs, and the control of all subordinate officers, it is the duty of the Governor to exercise through the Executive Council, hence the seats in that Council must be considered as in the nature of political offices, and if held in connection with other offices must give to these also a political character. This, however, leads me to observe, that if only two or three of the principal offices are to be regarded as political, it may very probably be advisable to assign salaries to two or three of the Executive Councillors as such. The Executive Council has duties of a very important character to perform; those duties, and the defects in the manner in which they had then generally been discharged, I find thus described in a confidential despatch which the late Lord Sydenham, then Mr. P. Thomson, addressed to Lord J. Russell, from Halifax, in the year 1840:—

“The functions of the Executive Council, on the other hand are, it is perfectly clear, of a totally different character. They are a body upon whom the Governor must be able to call at any or at all times for advice; with whom he can consult upon the measures to be submitted to the Legislature, and in whom he may find instruments, within its walls, to introduce such amendments in the laws as he may think necessary, or to defend his acts and his policy. It is obvious, therefore, that those who compose this body must be persons whose constant attendance on the Governor can be secured; principally, therefore, officers of the Government itself; but, when it may be expedient to introduce others, men holding seats in one or other House, taking a leading part in political life, and, above all, exercising influence over the Assembly.

“The last, and, in my opinion, by far the most serious defect in the Government is the utter absence of power in the Executive, and its total want of energy to attempt to occupy the attention of the country upon real improvements, or to lead the Legislature in the preparation and adoption of measures for the benefit of the colony. It does not appear to have occurred to any one that it is one of the first duties of the Government to suggest improvements where they are wanted. That the constitution having placed the power of legislation in the hands of an Assembly and a Council, it is only by acting through these bodies that this duty can be performed, and that if these proper and legitimate functions of Government are neglected, the necessary result must be, not only that the improvements which the people have a right to expect will be neglected, and the prosperity of the country checked, but that the popular branch of the Legislature will misuse its power, and the popular mind be easily led into excitement upon mere abstract theories of government, to which their attention is directed as the remedy for the uneasiness they feel."

In this view of the proper functions of the Executive Council I entirely concur; but I greatly doubt whether they could be adequately discharged by a Council composed of only two or three persons holding offices in the public service, and of gentlemen serving gratuitously. It is hardly possible to expect that those so serving should devote any large portion of their time to their public duties, and it therefore appears to me highly desirable that salaries should be assigned to at least one or two seats in the Executive Council.

On such terms as these, which I have thus detailed, it appears to me that the peculiar circumstances of Nova Scotia present no insuperable obstacle to the immediate adoption of that system of parliamentary government which has long prevailed in the mother country, and which seems to be a necessary part of representative institutions in a certain stage of their progress.

I have thought it due to you to enter thus fully into the practical difficulties to be encountered in giving effect to those general principles which, in my despatch of 3rd of November, I laid down for your guidance in the selection of your responsible advisers. I am in hopes that the present despatch will leave you in no doubt as to the course to be pursued by you in the event of any changes of which you may anticipate the contingency. I owed it to you to make myself clearly understood on this point; and I trust that what I have now said, will be regarded by your Council as amounting to such a declaration of my views as was requested by them in their letter of the 30th January.

(Signed) GREY.

THE QUEBEC RESOLUTIONS PRECEDENT TO THE CONFEDERATION OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA. 10 OCTOBER, 1864.

[“Debates in the Parliament of Canada on the Confederation of the British North American Provinces,” Quebec, 1865. Printed by Order of the Legislature, pp. 1027-1032.]

[RESOLUTIONS adopted at Quebec, 10th October, 1864, at a Conference of delegates from Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.]

I. The best interests and present and future prosperity of British North America will be promoted by a Federal Union under the Crown of Great Britain, provided such union can be effected on principles just to the several Provinces.

II. In the Federation of the British North American Provinces, the system of Government best adapted under existing circumstances to protect the diversified interests of the several Provinces, and secure efficiency, harmony and permanency in the working of the Union, would be a General Government charged with matters of common interest to the whole country, and Local Governments for each of the Canadas, and for the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, charged with the control of local matters in their respective sections,—provision being made for the admission into the Union, on equitable terms, of Newfoundland, the North-West Territory, British Columbia and Vancouver.

III. In framing a Constitution for the General Government, the Conference, with a view to the perpetuation of our connexion with the Mother Country, and the promotion of the best interests of the people of these Provinces, desire to follow the model of the British Constitution, so far as our circumstances will permit.

IV. The Executive Authority or Government shall be vested in the Sovereign of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and be administered according to the well-understood principles of the British Constitution, by the Sovereign personally, or by the Representative of the Sovereign duly authorised.

V. The Sovereign or Representative of the Sovereign shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Land and Naval Militia Forces.

VI. There shall be a General Legislature or Parliament for the Federated Provinces, composed of a Legislative Council and a House of Commons.

VII. For the purpose of forming the Legislative Council, the Federated Provinces shall be considered as consisting of three divisions: 1st, Upper Canada; 2nd, Lower Canada; 3rd, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island; each division with an equal representation in the Legislative Council.

VIII. Upper Canada shall be represented in the Legislative Council by 24 members, Lower Canada by 24 members, and the three Maritime Provinces by 24 members, of which Nova Scotia shall have 10, New Brunswick 10, and Prince Edward Island 4 members.

IX. The Colony of Newfoundland shall be entitled to enter the proposed Union with a representation in the Legislative Council of 4 members.

X. The North-West Territory, British Columbia and Vancouver shall be admitted into the Union on such terms and conditions as the Parliament of the Federated Provinces shall deem equitable, and as shall receive the assent of Her Majesty ; and in the case of the Province of British Columbia or Vancouver, as shall be agreed to by the Legislature of such Province.

XI. The members of the Legislative Council shall be appointed by the Crown under the Great Seal of the General Government, and shall hold office during life ; if any Legislative Councillor shall, for two consecutive sessions of Parliament, fail to give his attendance in the said Council, his seat shall thereby become vacant.

XII. The members of the Legislative Council shall be British subjects by birth or naturalization, of the full age of thirty years, shall possess a continuous real property qualification of four thousand dollars over and above all incumbrances, and shall be and continue worth that sum over and above their debts and liabilities ; but in the case of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, the property may be either real or personal.

XIII. If any question shall arise as to the qualification of a Legislative Councillor, the same shall be determined by the Council.

XIV. The first selection of the members of the Legislative Council shall be made, except as regards Prince Edward Island, from the Legislative Councils of the various Provinces so far as a sufficient number be found qualified and willing to serve ; such members shall be appointed by the Crown at the recommendation of the General Executive Government, upon the nomination of the respective Local Governments, and in such nomination due regard shall be had to the claims of the members of the Legislative Council of the opposition in each Province, so that all political parties may, as nearly as possible, be fairly represented.

XV. The Speaker of the Legislative Council (unless otherwise provided by Parliament) shall be appointed by the Crown from among the members of the Legislative Council, and shall hold office during pleasure, and shall only be entitled to a casting vote on an equality of votes.

XVI. Each of the twenty-four Legislative Councillors, representing Lower Canada in the Legislative Council of the General Legislature shall be appointed to represent one of the twenty-four Electoral Divisions mentioned in Schedule A of Chapter first of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, and such Councillor shall reside or possess his qualification in the Division he is appointed to represent.

XVII. The basis of Representation in the House of Commons shall be Population, as determined by the Official Census every ten years; and the number of members at first shall be 194, distributed as follows :

Upper Canada	82
Lower Canada	65
New Brunswick	15

Prince Edward Island	5

XVIII. Until the Official Census of 1871 has been made up, there shall be no change in the number of representatives from the several sections.

XIX. Immediately after the completion of the Census of 1871, and immediately after every decennial census thereafter, the Representation from each section in the House of Commons shall be readjusted on the basis of Population.

XX. For the purpose of such readjustments, Lower Canada shall always be assigned sixty-five members, and each of the other sections shall, at each readjustment, receive, for the ten years then next succeeding, the number of members to which it will be entitled on the same ratio of Representation to Population as Lower Canada will enjoy according to the Census last taken, by having sixty-five Members.

XXI. No reduction shall be made in the number of members returned by any section, unless its population shall have decreased, relatively to the population of the whole Union, to the extent of five per centum.

XXII. In computing at each decennial period the number of members to which each section is entitled, no fractional parts shall be considered, unless when exceeding one-half the number entitling to a member, in which case a member shall be given for each such fractional part.

XXIII. The Legislature of each Province shall divide such Province into the proper number of constituencies, and define the boundaries of each of them.

XXIV. The Local Legislature of each Province may, from time to time, alter the Electoral Districts for the purposes of Representation in such Local Legislature, and distribute the Representatives to which the Province is entitled in such Local Legislature, in any manner such Legislature may see fit.

XXV. The number of Members may at any time be increased by the General Parliament,—regard being had to the proportionate rights then existing.

XXVI. Until provisions are made by the General Parliament, all the laws which, at the date of the Proclamation constituting the Union, are in force in the Provinces respectively, relating to the qualification and disqualification of any person to be elected, or to sit or vote as a Member of the Assembly in the said Provinces respectively, and relating to the qualification or disqualification of voters, and to the oaths to be taken by voters, and to Returning Officers and their powers and duties,—and relating to the proceedings at Elections, and to the period during which such elections may be continued,—and relating to the Trial of Controverted Elections, and the proceedings incident thereto,—and relating to the vacating of seats of Members, and to the issuing and execution of new Writs, in case of any seat being vacated otherwise than by a dissolution—shall respectively apply to elections of Members to serve in the House of Commons, for places situate in those Provinces respectively.

XXVII. Every House of Commons shall continue for five years from the day of the return of the writs choosing the same, and no longer ; subject, nevertheless, to be sooner prorogued or dissolved by the Governor.

XXVIII. There shall be a Session of the General Parliament once, at least, in every year, so that a period of twelve calendar months shall not intervene between the last sitting of the General Parliament in one Session, and the first sitting thereof in the next Session.

SPEECH OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL MACDONALD
ON THE CONFEDERATION OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA. 6 FEBRUARY, 1865.

[“Debates in the Parliament of Canada on the Confederation of the British North American Provinces,” Quebec, 1865. Printed by Order of the Legislature, pp. 25-45.]

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
Monday, February 6, 1865.

ATTORNEY GENERAL MACDONALD: . . . I have had the honour of being charged, on behalf of the Government, to submit a scheme for the Confederation of all the British North American Provinces—a scheme which has been received, I am glad to say, with general, if not universal, approbation in Canada. The scheme, as propounded through the press, has received almost no opposition. While there may be occasionally, here and there, expressions of dissent from some of the details, yet the scheme as a whole has met with almost universal approval, and the Government has the greatest satisfaction in presenting it to this House. This subject, which now absorbs the attention of the people of Canada, and of the whole of British North America, is not a new one. For years it has more or less attracted the attention of every statesman and politician in these provinces, and has been looked upon by many far-seeing politicians as being eventually the means of deciding and settling very many of the vexed questions which have retarded the prosperity of the colonies as a whole, and particularly the prosperity of Canada. The subject was pressed upon the public attention by a great many writers and politicians; but I believe the attention of the Legislature was first formally called to it by my honorable friend the Minister of Finance.¹ Some years ago, in an elaborate speech, my hon. friend, while an independent member of Parliament, before being connected with any Government, pressed his views on the Legislature at great length and with his usual force. But the subject was not taken up by any party as a branch of their policy, until the formation of the Cartier-Macdonald Administration in 1858, when the Confederation of the colonies was announced as one of the measures which they pledged themselves to attempt, if possible, to bring to a satisfactory conclusion. In pursuance of that promise, the letter or despatch, which has been so much and so freely commented upon in the press and in this House, was addressed by three of the members of that Administration to the Colonial Office. The subject, however, though looked upon with favor by the country, and though there were no distinct expressions of opposition to it from any party, did not begin to assume its present proportions until last session. Then, men of all parties and all shades of politics became alarmed at the aspect of affairs. They found that such was the opposition between the two sections of the province, such was the danger of impending anarchy, in consequence of the irreconcilable differences of opinion, with respect to representation by population, between Upper and Lower Canada, that unless some solution of the difficulty was arrived at, we would suffer under a succession of weak governments,—weak in numerical support, weak in force, and weak in power of doing good. All were alarmed at this state of affairs. We had election after election,—we had ministry after ministry,—with the same result. Parties were so equally balanced, that the vote of one member might decide the fate of the Administration, and the course of legislation for a year or a series of years. This condition of things was well calculated to arouse the earnest consideration of every lover of his country, and I am happy to say it had that effect. None were more impressed by this momentous state of affairs, and the grave apprehensions that existed of a state of anarchy destroying our credit, destroying our prosperity, destroying our progress, than were the members of this present House; and the leading statesmen on both sides seemed to have come to the common conclusion, that some step must be taken to relieve the country from the dead-lock and impending anarchy that hung over us. With that view, my colleague, the President of the Council,¹ made a motion founded on the despatch addressed to the Colonial Minister, to which I have referred, and a committee was struck, composed of gentlemen of both sides of the House, of all shades of political opinion, without any reference to whether they were supporters of the Administration of the day or belonged to the Opposition, for the purpose of taking into calm and full deliberation the evils which threatened the future of Canada. That motion of my honorable friend resulted most happily. The committee, by a wise provision,—and in order that each member of the committee might have an opportunity of expressing his opinions without being in any way compromised before the public, or with his party, in regard either to his political friends or to his political foes,—agreed that the discussion should be freely entered upon without reference to the political antecedents of any of them, and that they should sit with closed doors, so that they might be able to approach the subject frankly and in a spirit of compromise. The committee included most of the leading members of the House,—I had the honor myself to be one of the number,—and the result was that there was found an ardent desire—a creditable desire, I must say,—displayed by all the members of the committee to approach the subject honestly, and to attempt to work out some solution which might relieve Canada from the evils under which she labored. The report of that committee was laid before the House, and then came the political action of the leading men of the two parties in this House, which ended in the formation of the present Government. The principle upon which that Government was formed has been announced, and is known to all. It was formed for the very purpose of carrying out the object which has now received to a certain degree its completion, by the resolutions I have had the honor to place in your hands. As has been stated, it was not without a great deal of difficulty and reluctance that that Government was formed. The gentlemen who compose this Government had for many years been engaged in political hostilities to such an extent that it affected even their social relations. But the crisis was great, the danger was imminent, and the gentlemen who now form the present Administration found it to be their duty to lay aside all personal feelings, to sacrifice in some degree their position, and even to run the risk of having their motives impugned, for the sake of arriving at some conclusion that would be satisfactory to the country in general. The present resolutions were the result. And, as I said before, I am proud to believe that the country has sanctioned, as I trust that the representatives of the people in this House will sanction, the scheme which is now submitted for the future government of British North America. Everything seemed to favor the project, and everything seemed to show that the present was the time, if ever, when this great union between all Her Majesty's subjects dwelling in British North America, should be carried out. When the Government was formed, it was felt that the difficulties in the way of effecting a union between all the British North American Colonies were great—so great as almost, in the opinion of many, to make it hopeless. And with that view it was the policy of the Government, if they could not succeed in procuring a union between all the British North American Colonies, to attempt to free the country from the dead-lock in which we were placed in Upper and Lower Canada, in consequence of the difference of opinion between the two sections, by having a severance to a certain extent of the present union between the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and the substitution of a Federal Union between them. Most of us, however, I may say, all of us, were agreed—and I believe every thinking man will agree—as to the expediency of effecting a union between all the provinces, and the superiority of such a design, if it were only practicable, over the smaller scheme of having a Federal Union between Upper and Lower Canada alone. By a happy concurrence of events, the time came when that proposition could be made with a hope of success. By a fortunate coincidence the desire for union existed in the Lower Provinces, and a feeling of the necessity of strengthening themselves by collecting together the scattered colonies on the sea-board, had induced them to form a convention of their own for the purpose of effecting a union of the Maritime Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, the legislatures of those colonies having formally authorized their respective governments to send a delegation to Prince Edward Island for the purpose of attempting to form a union of some kind. Whether the union should be federal or legislative was not then indicated, but a union of some kind was sought for the purpose of making of themselves one people instead of three. We, ascertaining that they were about to take such a step, and knowing that if we allowed the occasion to pass, if they did indeed break up all their present political organizations and form a new one, it could not be expected that they would again readily destroy the new organization which they had formed,—the union of the three provinces on the sea-board,—and form another with Canada. Knowing this, we availed ourselves of the opportunity, and asked if they would receive a deputation from Canada, who would go to meet them at Charlottetown, for the purpose of laying before them the advantages of a larger and more extensive union, by the junction of all the provinces in one great government under our common Sovereign. They at once kindly consented to receive and hear us. They did receive us cordially and generously, and asked us to lay our views before them. We did so at some length, and so satisfactory to them were the reasons we gave; so clearly, in their opinion, did we show the advantages of the greater union over the lesser, that they at once set aside their own project, and joined heart and hand with us in entering into the larger scheme, and trying to form, as far as they and we could, a great nation and a strong government. Encouraged by this arrangement, which, however, was altogether unofficial and unauthorized, we returned to Quebec, and then the Government of Canada invited the several governments of the sister colonies to send a deputation here from each of them for the purpose of considering the question, with something like authority from their respective governments. The result was, that when we met here on the 10th of October, on the first day on which we assembled, after the full and free discussions which had taken place at Charlottetown, the first resolution now before this House was passed unanimously, being received with acclamation, as in the opinion of every one who heard it, a proposition which ought to receive, and would receive, the sanction of each government and each people. The resolution is, "That the best interests and present and future prosperity of British North America will be promoted by a Federal Union under the Crown of Great Britain, provided such union can be effected on principles just to the several provinces." It seemed to all the statesmen assembled—and there are great statesmen in the Lower Provinces, men who would do honor to any government and to any legislature of any free country enjoying representative institutions—it was clear to them all that the best interests and present and future prosperity of British North America would be promoted by a Federal Union under the Crown of Great Britain. And it seems to me, as to them, and I think it will so appear to the people of this country, that, if we wish to be a great people; if we wish to form—using the expression which was sneered at the other evening—a great nationality, commanding the respect of the world, able to hold our own against all opponents, and to defend those institutions we prize: if we wish to have one system of government, and to establish a commercial union, with unrestricted free trade, between people of the five provinces, belonging, as they do, to the same nation, obeying the same Sovereign, owning the same allegiance, and being, for the most part, of the same blood and lineage: if we wish to be able to afford to each other the means of mutual defence and support against aggression and attack—this can only be obtained by a union of some kind between the scattered and weak boundaries composing the British North American Provinces.

There were . . . only three modes that were at all suggested, by which the deadlock in our affairs, the anarchy we dreaded, and the evils which retarded our prosperity, could be met or averted. One was the dissolution of the union between Upper and Lower Canada, leaving them as they were before the union of 1841. I believe that that proposition, by itself had no supporters. It was felt by everyone that, although it was a course that would do away with the sectional difficulties which existed,—though it would remove the pressure on the part of the people of Upper Canada for representation based upon population,—and the jealousy of the people of Lower Canada lest their institutions should be attacked and prejudiced by that principle in our representation; yet it was felt by every thinking man in the province that it would be a retrograde step, which would throw back the country to nearly the same position as it occupied before the union,—that it would lower the credit enjoyed by United Canada,—that it would be the breaking up of the connexion which had existed for nearly a quarter of a century, and, under which, although it had not been completely successful, and had not allayed altogether the local jealousies that had their root in circumstances which arose before the Union, our province, as a whole, had nevertheless prospered and increased. It was felt that a dissolution of the union would have destroyed all the credit that we had gained by being a united province, and would have left us two weak and ineffective governments, instead of one powerful and united people.

The next mode suggested was the granting of representation by population. Now, we all know the manner in which that question was and is regarded by Lower Canada; that while in Upper Canada the desire and cry for it was daily augmenting, the resistance to it in Lower Canada was proportionably increasing in strength. Still, if some such means of relieving us from the sectional jealousies which existed between the two Canadas, if some such solution of the difficulties as Confederation had not been found, the representation by population must eventually have been carried; no matter though it might have been felt in Lower Canada, as being a breach of the Treaty of Union, no matter how much it might have been felt by the Lower Canadians that it would sacrifice their local interests, it is certain that in the progress of events representation by population would have been carried ; and, had it been carried—I speak here my own individual sentiments—I do not think it would have been for the interest of Upper Canada. For though Upper Canada would have felt that it had received what it claimed as a right, and had succeeded in establishing its right, yet it would have left the Lower Province with a sullen feeling of injury and injustice. The Lower Canadians would not have worked cheerfully under such a change of system, but would have ceased to be what they are now—a nationality, with representatives in Parliament, governed by general principles, and dividing according to their political opinions—and would have been in great danger of becoming a faction, forgetful of national obligations, and only actuated by a desire to defend their own sectional interests, their own laws, and their own institutions.

The third and only means of solution for our difficulties was the junction of the provinces either in a Federal or a Legislative Union. Now, as regards the comparative advantages of a Legislative and a Federal Union, I have never hesitated to state my own opinions. I have again and again stated in the House, that, if practicable, I thought a Legislative Union would be preferable. I have always contended that if we could agree to have one government and one parliament, legislating for the whole of these peoples, it would be the best, the cheapest, the most vigorous, and the strongest system of government we could adopt. But, on looking at the subject in the Conference, and discussing the matter as we did, most unreservedly, and with a desire to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion, we found that such a system was impracticable. In the first place, it would not meet the assent of the people of Lower Canada, because they felt that in their peculiar position—being in a minority, with a different language, nationality and religion from the majority,—in case of a junction with the other provinces, their institutions and their laws might be assailed, and their ancestral associations, on which they prided themselves, attacked and prejudiced ; it was found that any proposition which involved the absorption of the individuality of Lower Canada—if I may use the expression —would not be received with favor by her people. We found too, that though their people speak the same language and enjoy the same system of law as the people of Upper Canada, a system founded on the common law of England, there was as great a disinclination on the part of the various Maritime Provinces to lose their individuality, as separate political organizations, as we observed in the case of Lower Canada herself. Therefore, we were forced to the conclusion that we must either abandon the idea of union altogether, or devise a system of union in which the separate provincial organizations would be in some degree preserved. So that those who were, like myself, in favor of a Legislative Union, were obliged to modify their views and accept the project of a Federal Union as the only scheme practicable, even for the Maritime Provinces. Because, although the law of those provinces is founded on the common law of England, yet every one of them has a large amount of law of its own—colonial law framed by itself, and affecting every relation of life, such as the laws of property, municipal and assessment laws; laws relating to the liberty of the subject, and to all the great interests contemplated in legislation; we found, in short, that the statutory law of the different provinces was so varied and diversified that it was almost impossible to weld them into a Legislative Union at once. . . . I am happy to state—and indeed it appears on the face of the resolutions themselves—that, as regards the Lower Provinces, a great desire was evinced for the final assimilation of our laws. One of the resolutions provides that an attempt shall be made to assimilate the laws of the Maritime Provinces and those of Upper Canada, for the purpose of eventually establishing one body of statutory law, founded on the common law of England, the parent of the laws of all those provinces.

One great objection made to a Federal Union was the expense of an increased number of legislatures. I will not enter at any length into that subject, because my honorable friends, the Finance Minister and the President of the Council . . . will, I think, be able to show that the expenses under a Federal Union will not be greater than those under the existing system of separate governments and legislatures. . . . In the proposed Constitution all matters of general interest are to be dealt with by the General Legislature; while the local legislatures will deal with matters of local interest, which do not affect the Confederation as a whole, but are of the greatest importance to their particular sections. By such a division of labor the sittings of the General Legislature would not be so protracted as even those of Canada alone. And so with the local legislatures, their attention being confined to subjects pertaining to their own sections, their sessions would be shorter and less expensive. Then, when we consider the enormous saving that will be effected in the administration of affairs by one General Government—when we reflect that each of the five colonies has a government of its own with a complete establishment of public departments and all the machinery required for the transaction of the business of the country—that each has a separate executive, judicial and militia system—that each province has a separate ministry, including a Minister of Militia, with a complete Adjutant General's Department—that each has a Finance Minister with a full Customs and Excise Staff—that each Colony has as large and complete an administrative organization, with as many Executive officers as the General Government will have—we can well understand the enormous saving that will result from a union of all the colonies, from their having but one head and one central system.

We, in Canada, already know something of the advantages and disadvantages of a Federal Union. Although we have nominally a Legislative Union in Canada—although we sit in one Parliament, supposed constitutionally to represent the people without regard to sections or localities, yet we know, as a matter of fact, that since the union in 1841, we have had a Federal Union; that in matters affecting Upper Canada solely, members from that section claimed and generally exercised the right of exclusive legislation, while members from Lower Canada legislated in matters affecting only their own section. . . .

If we are not blind to our present position, we must see the hazardous situation in which all the great interests of Canada stand in respect to the United States. I am no alarmist. I do not believe in the prospect of immediate war. I believe that the common sense of the two nations will prevent a war; still we cannot trust to probabilities. The Government and Legislature would be wanting in their duty to the people if they ran any risk. We know that the United States at this moment are engaged in a war of enormous dimensions—that the occasion of a war with Great Britain has again and again arisen, and may at any time in the future again arise. We cannot foresee what may be the result; we cannot say but that the two nations may drift into a war as other nations have done before. It would then be too late when war had commenced to think of measures for strengthening ourselves, or to begin negotiations for a union with the sister provinces. At this moment, in consequence of the ill-feeling which has arisen between England and the United States—a feeling of which Canada was not the cause—in consequence of the irritation which now exists, owing to the unhappy state of affairs on this continent, the Reciprocity Treaty, it seems probable, is about to be brought to an end—our trade is hampered by the passport system, and at any moment we may be deprived of permission to carry our goods through United States channels—the bonded goods system may be done away with, and the winter trade through the United States put an end to. Our merchants may be obliged to return to the old system of bringing in during the summer months the supplies for the whole year. Ourselves already threatened, our trade interrupted, our intercourse, political and commercial, destroyed, if we do not take warning now when we have the opportunity, and while one avenue is threatened to be closed, open another by taking advantage of the present arrangement and the desire of the Lower Provinces to draw closer the alliance between us, we may suffer commercial and political disadvantages it may take long for us to overcome.

The Conference having come to the conclusion that a legislative union, pure and simple, was impracticable, our next attempt was to form a government upon federal principles, which would give to the General Government the strength of a legislative and administrative union, while at the same time it preserved that liberty of action for the different sections which is allowed by a Federal Union. And I am strong in the belief—that we have hit upon the happy medium in those resolutions, and that we have formed a scheme of government which unites the advantages of both, giving us the strength of a legislative union and the sectional freedom of a federal union, with protection to local interests. In doing so we had the advantage of the experience of the United States. It is the fashion now to enlarge on the defects of the Constitution of the United States, but I am not one of those who look upon it as a failure. I think and believe that it is one of the most skilful works which human intelligence ever created ; it is one of the most perfect organizations that ever governed a free people. To say that it has some defects is but to say that it is not the work of Omniscience, but of human intellects. We are happily situated in having had the opportunity of watching its operation, seeing its working from its infancy till now. It was in the main formed on the model of the Constitution of Great Britain, adapted to the circumstances of a new country, and was perhaps the only practicable system that could have been adopted under the circumstances existing at the time of its formation. We can now take advantage of the experience of the last seventy-eight years, during which that Constitution has existed, and I am strongly of the belief that we have, in a great measure, avoided in this system which we propose for the adoption of the people of Canada, the defects which time and events have shown to exist in the American Constitution.

In the first place, by a resolution which meets with the universal approval of the people of this country, we have provided that for all time to come, so far as we can legislate for the future, we shall have as the head of the executive power, the Sovereign of Great Britain. No one can look into futurity and say what will be the destiny of this country. Changes come over nations and peoples in the course of ages. But, so far as we can legislate, we provide that, for all time to come, the Sovereign of Great Britain shall be the Sovereign of British North America. By adhering to the monarchical principle, we avoid one defect inherent in the Constitution of the United States. By the election of the President by a majority and for a short period, he never is the sovereign and chief of the nation.

He is never looked up to by the whole people as the head and front of the nation. He is at best but the successful leader of a party. This defect is all the greater on account of the practice of re-election. During his first term of office, he is employed in taking steps to secure his own re-election, and for his party a continuance of power. We avoid this by adhering to the monarchical principle—the Sovereign whom you respect and love. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have that principle recognized, so that we shall have a Sovereign who is placed above the region of party—to whom all parties look up—who is not elevated by the action of one party nor depressed by the action of another, who is the common head and sovereign of all.

In the Constitution we propose to continue the system of Responsible Government, which has existed in this province since 1841, and which has long obtained in the Mother Country. This is a feature of our Constitution as we have it now, and as we shall have it in the Federation, in which, I think, we avoid one of the great defects in the Constitution of the United States. There the President, during his term of office, is in a great measure a despot, a one-man power, with the command of the naval and military forces—with an immense amount of patronage as head of the Executive, and with the veto power as a branch of the legislature, perfectly uncontrolled by responsible advisers, his cabinet being departmental officers merely, whom he is not obliged by the Constitution to consult with, unless he chooses to do so. With us the Sovereign, or in this country the Representative of the Sovereign, can act only on the advice of his ministers, those ministers being responsible to the people through Parliament.

Prior to the formation of the American Union, as we all know, the different states which entered into it were separate colonies. They had no connexion with each other further than that of having a common Sovereign, just as with us at present. Their Constitutions and their laws were different. They might and did legislate against each other, and when they revolted against the Mother Country they acted as separate sovereignties, and carried on the war by a kind of treaty of alliance against the common enemy. Ever since the union was formed the difficulty of what is called "State Rights" has existed, and this had much to do in bringing on the present unhappy war in the United States. They commenced, in fact, at the wrong end. They declared by their Constitution that each state was a sovereignty in itself, and that all the powers incident to a sovereignty belonged to each State, except those powers which, by the Constitution, were conferred upon the General Government and Congress. Here we have adopted a different system. We have strengthened the General Government. We have given the General Legislature all the great subjects of legislation. We have conferred on them, not only specifically and in detail, all the powers which are incident to sovereignty, but we have expressly declared that all subjects of general interest not distinctly and exclusively conferred upon the local governments and local legislatures, shall be conferred upon the General Government and Legislature. We have thus avoided that great source of weakness which has been the cause of the disruption of the United States. . . .

I believe that, while England has no desire to lose her colonies, but wishes to retain them, while I am satisfied that the public mind of England would deeply regret the loss of these provinces—yet, if the people of British North America after full deliberation had stated that they considered it was for their interest, for the advantage of the future of British North America to sever the tie, such is the generosity of the people of England, that, whatever their desire to keep these colonies, they would not seek to compel us to remain unwilling subjects of the British Crown. If therefore, at the Conference, we had arrived at the conclusion, that it was for the interest of these provinces that a severance should take place, I am sure that Her Majesty and the Imperial Parliament would have sanctioned that severance. We accordingly felt that there was a propriety in giving a distinct declaration of opinion on that point, and that, in framing the Constitution, its first sentence should declare, that "The Executive authority or government shall be vested in the Sovereign of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and be administered according to the well understood principles of the British Constitution, by the Sovereign personally, or by the Representative of the Sovereign duly authorized." . . .

SPEECH OF THE EARL OF CARNARVON, SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES, IN INTRO-DUCING THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA BILL.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, February 19, 1867.

British North America Bill.

SECOND READING.

The Earl of Carnarvon :

. . . This Bill embraces only the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, of Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick. The time, indeed, will come before long, I cannot doubt, when Newfoundland and Prince Edward's Island will gravitate towards the common centre of this Confederation. Every consideration of policy and interest will lead them towards this conclusion. The time also is not distant when the broad and fertile districts towards the west of Canada, now under the rule of a trading Company, will form part of the Confederation—perhaps it is not very far distant when even British Columbia and Vancouver's Island may be incorporated, and one single system of English law and commerce and policy extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific. . . .

I come now to the Legislature which it is proposed to create under this Bill. It is two-fold—a Central Parliament and Local Legislatures in each Province. I will deal with the Central Parliament first. It will be composed of two Chambers—an Upper Chamber, to be styled the Senate, and a Lower Chamber, to be termed, in affectionate remembrance of some of the best and noblest traditions of English history, the House of Commons. Of all problems to be solved in the creation of a Colonial Constitution, none is more difficult than the composition of an Upper House. . . . There are, in my opinion, two broad principles to be kept in view in the creation of a Colonial Chamber : first, that it should be strong enough to maintain its own opinion, and to resist the sudden gusts of popular feeling ; secondly, that it should not be so strong that it should be impenetrable to public sentiment, and therefore out of harmony with the other branch of the Legislature. These are conditions difficult under the most favourable circumstances to secure ; but they are complicated in this instance by a third, which has been made a fundamental principle of the measure by the several contracting parties, and the object of which is to provide for a permanent representation and protection of sectional interests. I will briefly explain how far these three considerations appear to me to have been met in this Bill. The Senate will consist of seventy-two Members, the four Provinces being for this purpose divided into three sections, of which Upper Canada will be one, Lower Canada one, and the Maritime Provinces one. From each of these three sections an equal number of twenty-four Members will be returned. They will be nominated by the Governor General in Council for life. But as it is obvious that the principle of life nomination, combined with a fixed number of Members, might render a difference of opinion between the two Houses a question almost insoluble under many years, and might bring about what is popularly known as a Legislative dead-lock, a power is conferred upon the Crown—a power, I need not say, that would only be exercised under exceptional and very grave circumstances—to add six Members to the Senate, subject to a restriction that those six Members shall be taken equally from the three sections, so as in no way to disturb their relative strength, and that the next vacancies shall not be filled up until the Senate is reduced to its normal number. It may, perhaps, be said that the addition of six Members will be insufficient to obviate the Legislative discord against which we desire to provide. I am free to confess that I could have wished that the margin had been broader. At the same time, the average vacancies which have of recent years occurred in the nominated portion of the present Legislative Council of Canada, go far to show that, even in the ordinary course of events, the succession of Members will be rapid. . . .

I now come to the constitution of the House of Commons. The principle upon which the Senate is constructed is, as I have explained, the representation and the protection of sectional interests. The principle upon which the House of Commons is founded is that of a representation in accordance with population.

It will not be, indeed, a representation of mere numbers distributed equally in electoral districts ; but whilst population is made the basis of representation, each Province will have its own number of representatives in proportion to their own population, and in proportion also to the population and representatives conjoined of their neighbours. Unlike other popular Assemblies, the Canadian House of Commons will be a variable number ; but it will vary by reference to a particular standard. That standard will be given by Lower Canada, which is to retain its present quota of sixty-five Members, and will in fact be the proportion which these sixty-five Members bear to the population of the Province. If Lower Canada, with a population of 1,100,000, has sixty-five Members, Upper Canada, with a population of nearly 1,500,000, will have eighty-two Members. It may, indeed, happen that an increase of the total numbers of the House may become necessary. Power is reserved for this contingency ; but in such case the increase will be regulated in all the other Provinces by reference to the number of Members representing Lower Canada, and by the proportion between those Members and the population in that Province. But as the representation of population will be based upon the census, there will be a decennial re-adjustment of it. . . .

The Local Legislatures to be established in each Province stand next in order ; and my task here is easy ; for whilst the provisions regulating the constitution of the central Parliament are in the nature of permanent enactments, those which govern the Local Legislatures will be subject to amendment by those bodies. This portion, therefore, of the Bill is intended to provide the temporary machinery by which each Province will be enabled to enter upon its new life and political duties. . . .

My Lords, I now pass to that which is, perhaps, the most delicate and the most important part of this measure—the distribution of powers between the Central Parliament and the local authorities. In this is, I think, comprised the main theory and constitution of Federal Government ; on this depends the practical working of the new system. And here we navigate a sea of difficulties. There are rocks on the right hand and on the left. If, on the one hand, the Central Government be too strong, then there is risk that it may absorb the local action and that wholesome self-government by the provincial bodies, which it is a matter both of good faith, and political expediency to maintain : if, on the other hand, the Central Government is not strong enough, then arises a conflict of State rights and pretensions, cohesion is destroyed, and the effective vigor of the central authority is encroached upon. The real object which we have in view is to give to the Central Government those high functions and almost sovereign powers by which general principles and uniformity of legislation may be secured in those questions which are of common import to all the Provinces ; and, at the same time, to retain for each Province so ample a measure of municipal liberty and self-government as will allow and indeed compel them to exercise those local powers which they can exercise with great advantage to the community. In Australia there is at present a tendency towards the disintegration of the vast territories which are called colonies, because those who live at great distances on their extreme borders complain that they cannot obtain from the Central Parliaments the attention which they require. In New Zealand, on the other hand, an attempt—and not without success—has been made to combine considerable local powers with a general Government at the centre.

In this Bill the division of powers has been mainly effected by a distinct classification. That classification is fourfold. 1st, those subjects of legislation which are attributed to the Central Parliament exclusively ; 2nd, those which belong to the Provincial Legislatures exclusively ; 3rd, those which are subjects of concurrent legislation ; and 4th, a particular question which is dealt with exceptionally. To the Central Parliament belong all questions of the public debt or property, all regulations with regard to trade or commerce, customs and excise, loans, the raising of revenue by any mode or system of taxation, all provisions as to currency, coinage, banking, postal arrangements, the regulation of the census, and the issue and collection of statistics. To the Central Parliament will also be assigned the enactment of criminal law. The administration of it indeed is vested in the local authorities ; but the power of general legislation is very properly reserved for the Central Parliament. And in this I cannot but note a wise departure from the system pursued in the United States, where each State is competent to deal as it may please with its criminal code, and where an offence may be visited with one penalty in the State of New York, and with another in the State of Virginia. The system here proposed is, I believe, a better and safer one; and I trust that before very long the criminal law of the four Provinces may be assimilated—and assimilated, I will add, upon the basis of English procedure. Lastly, the fisheries, the navigation and shipping, the quarantine regulations, the lighting of the coast, and the general question of naval and military defence, will be placed under the exclusive control of the Central Government.

The principal subjects reserved to the Local Legislatures are the sale and management of the public lands, the control of their hospitals, asylums, charitable and municipal institutions, and the raising of money by means of direct taxation. The several Provinces, which are now free to raise a revenue as they may think fit, surrender to the Central Parliament all powers under this head except that of direct taxation. Lastly, and in conformity with all recent colonial legislation, the Provincial Legislatures are empowered to amend their own constitutions. But there is, as I have said, a concurrent power of legislation to be exercised by the Central and the Local Parliaments. It extends over three separate subjects—immigration, agriculture, public works. Of these the two first will in most cases probably be treated by the Provincial authorities. They are subjects which in their ordinary character are local; but it is possible that they may have, under the changing circumstances of a young country, a more general bearing, and therefore a discretionary power of interference is wisely reserved to the Central Parliament. Public works fall into two classes: First, those which are purely local, such as roads and bridges, and municipal buildings—and these belong not only as a matter of right, but also as a matter of duty, to the local authorities. Secondly, there are public works which, though possibly situated in a single Province, such as telegraphs, and canals, and railways, are yet of common import and value to the entire Confederation, and over these it is clearly right that the Central Government should exercise a controlling authority.

Lastly, in the 93rd clause, which contains the exceptional provisions to which I referred, your Lordships will observe some rather complicated arrangements in reference to education. I need hardly say that that great question gives rise to nearly as much earnestness and division of opinion on that as on this side of the Atlantic. This clause has been framed after long and anxious controversy, in which all parties have been represented, and on conditions to which all have given their consent. It is an understanding which, as it only concerns the local interests affected, is not one that Parliament would be willing to disturb, even if in the opinion of Parliament it were susceptible of amendment; but I am bound to add, as the expression of my own opinion, that the terms of the agreement appear to me to be equitable and judicious. For the object of the clause is to secure to the religious minority of one Province the same rights, privileges, and protection, which the religious minority of another Province may enjoy. The Roman Catholic minority of Upper Canada, the Protestant minority of Lower Canada, and the Roman Catholic minority of the Maritime Provinces, will thus stand on a footing of entire equality. But in the event of any wrong at the hand of the local majority, the minority have a right to appeal to the Governor-General in Council, and may claim the application of any remedial laws that may be necessary from the Central Parliament of the Confederation.

In closing my observations upon the distribution of powers, I ought to point out that just as the authority of the Central Parliament will prevail whenever it may come into conflict with the Local Legislatures, so the residue of legislation, if any, unprovided for in the specific classification which I have explained, will belong to the central body. It will be seen, under the 91st clause, that the classification is not intended "to restrict the generality" of the powers previously given to the Central Parliament, and that those powers extend to all laws made "for the peace, order, and good government" of the Confederation—terms which, according to all precedent, will, I understand, carry with them an ample measure of legislative authority. . . .

I have now stated the general principles upon which this measure is founded. But to so large a scheme, as might naturally be expected, objections have been made; and these objections, or some of them, it is my duty to indicate. And first, it has been urged that this Union should have been a legislative rather than a federal one. I admit, to a certain extent, the validity of the objection. When Upper and Lower Canada were connected in a legislative Union, Lord Durham distinctly contemplated a similar incorporation of the Maritime Provinces. Nor are there wanting to this opinion many of the ablest of Canadian statesmen. But the answer is simply this—that a legislative Union is, under existing circumstances, impracticable. The Maritime Provinces are ill-disposed to surrender their separate life, and to merge their individuality in the political organization of the general body. It is in their case impossible, even if it were desirable, by a stroke of the pen to bring about a complete assimilation of their institutions to those of their neighbours. Lower Canada, too, is jealous, as she is deservedly proud, of her ancestral customs and traditions; she is wedded to her peculiar institutions, and will enter this Union only upon the distinct understanding that she retains them. The 42nd Article of the Treaty of Capitulation in 1760, when Canada was ceded by the Marquis de Vaudreuil to General Amhurst, runs thus—“Les François et Canadiens continueront d'être gouvernés suivant la Coutume de Paris et les loix et usages établis pour ce pays.”

The Coutume de Paris is still the accepted basis of their Civil Code, and their national institutions have been alike respected by their fellow-subjects and cherished by themselves. And it is with these feelings and on these terms that Lower Canada now consents to enter this Confederation.

But it has been objected that this union of Provinces will be a kingdom, not a Confederation, and that being an embodiment of the monarchical principle, it will constitute a challenge, to our powerful republican neighbour across the border. Now I am at a loss to understand how these Provinces, when united, can be one whit more or [one] whit less of a kingdom than when separate. There will be, with some few modifications, the same institutions, the same forms of government, and even the same men to give life and movement to them. It is but a development of the existing system. But whilst it is attacked by one critic as too monarchical in its character, it is assailed by another as too republican, and we are warned that it must ere long on American soil become a Republic, and lead to the dismemberment of the Empire. Now I do not see special cause for apprehension from republican any more than from monarchical dangers, but I must submit that, at all events, the two allegations are fatally inconsistent with each other.

Again, it has been said that this great scheme owes its origin to the lust of territorial dominion on the part of one State, and that it is solely referable to the overweening ambition of Canada to exercise a supremacy over her sister Provinces. For this allegation I cannot see the smallest groundwork of argument; and, looking to the past history and the ordinary probabilities of these colonies, I can conceive nothing more unlikely than a combination of Upper and Lower Canada as against the Maritime Provinces. If, indeed, any one of these Provinces has a reasonable ground for apprehension, it is Lower Canada, with its distinct race and language and institutions, rather than Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which are in all essentials so akin to the great and populous Province of Upper Canada. But whilst this large scheme of union has been attributed to the desire of political supremacy on the part of Canada, it is in the same breath referred to the irreconcilable differences which are supposed to have divided Upper and Lower Canada. I believe, for my own part, that those differences have been greatly exaggerated; but anyhow it is clear that the two objections cannot both be correct. They destroy each other. And this, indeed, I may observe, is the case with several other objections that have been urged; as when, in England, we are told that the object of this scheme is the imposition of fresh burdens upon the mother country, and, in America, that its object will be the imposition of pecuniary charges upon the Maritime Provinces.

. . . Let me now review some of the advantages which may be reasonably anticipated. And first, I hope that this measure may well and effectually compose some of those complaints which from time to time must arise out of such an union as that which at present subsists between Upper and Lower Canada. It has, for instance, been said, that whilst Upper Canada possesses the largest population, she has only an equal voice in the representation of their common interests in the joint Legislature. But this inequality will be redressed by the principle of representation according to population, upon which the House of Commons is to be constituted. Nor will Upper Canada gain unduly by this arrangement, for whilst her interests will be protected by a representation in accordance with population in the Lower House, the interests of Lower Canada will be guarded by an equality of the sectional votes in the Upper House. Again, it has been said that whilst Upper Canada contributes the larger share of taxation, Lower Canada enjoys more than her just portion of the public expenditure. That allegation, whether well or ill-founded, also finds its answer in this Bill. Henceforward, apart from the revenue raised for the common purposes of the Confederation, local taxation and expenditure will depend upon the local authorities. Thus, all those complaints which must arise under the circumstances of such an union as that which now exists—complaints of partiality, of neglect, of mismanagement of roads, bridges, and those public works which are the very life of a young community, must cease. . . .

But if the advantages of union are great in a military, a commercial, a material point of view, they are not, I think, less in the moral and political aspect of the question. When once existing restrictions are removed, and the schools, the law courts, the professions, the industries of these great Provinces are thrown open from one end to another, depend upon it a stimulus greater than any that has ever been known before in British North America will be applied to every form of mental or moral energy. . . .

the Representation of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in the Senate shall, as Vacancies occur, be reduced from Twelve to Ten Members respectively, and the Representation of each of those Provinces shall not be increased at any Time beyond Ten, except under the Provisions of this Act for the Appointment of Three or Six additional Senators under the Direction of the Queen.

AMENDMENTS AFFECTING CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT OF 1867.

[“Statutes of Canada,” 38 Vict. Cap. 11, Sec. 17.]

SUBJECT to the limitations and provisions hereinafter made, an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court from all final judgments of the highest Court of final resort, whether such Court be a Court of Appeal or of original jurisdiction, now or hereafter established in any Province of Canada in cases in which the Court of original jurisdiction is a Superior Court: Provided that no appeal shall be allowed from any judgment rendered in the Province of Quebec, in any case wherein the sum or value of the matter in dispute does not amount to two thousand dollars; and the right to appeal in civil cases given by this Act, shall be understood to be given in such cases only as are mentioned in this section, except Exchequer cases, cases of mandamus, habeas corpus, or municipal by-laws, as hereinafter provided.

[Revised Statutes, Dominion of Canada, 1886, Vol. II., Cap. 135.

An Act respecting the Supreme and Exchequer Courts—
Sec. 26.]

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act or in the Act providing for the appeal, no appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court but from the highest Court of last resort having jurisdiction in the Province in which the action, suit, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding was originally instituted, whether the judgment or decision in such action, suit, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding was or was not a proper subject of appeal to such highest Court of last resort :

(2) Provided, that an appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court from the judgment of the Court of original jurisdiction by consent of parties :

(3) Provided also, that an appeal shall lie to the Supreme Court by leave of such Court, or a Judge thereof, from any judgment, decree, decretal order, or order made and pronounced by a Superior Court of Equity, or made or pronounced by any Judge in Equity, or by any Superior Court in any action, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding in the nature of a suit or proceeding in equity, and from the final judgment of any Superior Court of any Province other than the Province of Quebec in any action, suit, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding originally commenced in such Superior Court, without any intermediate appeal being had to any intermediate Court of appeal in the Province.

No appeal shall lie under this Act from any judgment rendered in the Province of Quebec, in any action, suit, cause, matter or other judicial proceeding, wherein the matter in controversy does not amount to the sum or value of two thousand dollars, unless such matter, if less than that amount,—

- (a) Involves the question of the validity of an Act of the Parliament of Canada, or of the Legislature of any of the Provinces of Canada, or of an Ordinance or Act of any of the Councils or Legislative bodies of any of the Territories or Districts of Canada ; or—
- (b) Relates to any fee of office, duty, rent, revenue or any sum of money payable to Her Majesty, or to any title to lands or tenements, annual rents or such like matters or things where the rights in future might be bound :

["Statutes of Canada," 54 and 55 Vict. Cap. 25, Sec. 3. Repealing Sub-Sec. 2, Sec. 29, Revised Statutes, 1886, Cap. 135]:—

(2) Provided that such appeals shall lie only from the Courts of Queen's Bench, or from the Superior Court in review in cases where, and so long as, no appeal lies from the judgment of that Court when it confirms the judgment rendered in the Court appealed from, which by the law of the Province of Quebec are appealable to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council:

(3) Whenever the right to appeal is dependent upon the amount in dispute, such amount shall be understood to be that demanded and not that recovered, if they are different.

[Sec. 4. Repealing Sec. 37, Cap. 135, Revised Statutes, 1886]:—

(1) Important questions of law or fact touching provincial legislation, or the appellate jurisdiction as to educational matters vested in the Governor in Council by "The British North America Act, 1867," or by any other Act or law, or touching the constitutionality of any legislation of the Parliament of Canada, or touching any other matter with reference to which he sees fit to exercise this power, may be referred, by the Governor in Council, to the Supreme Court for hearing or consideration; and the Court shall thereupon hear and consider the same:

(2) The Court shall certify to the Governor in Council, for his information, its opinion on questions so referred, with the reasons therefor, which shall be given in like manner as in the case of a judgment upon an appeal to the said Court; and any Judge who differs from the opinion of the majority shall, in like manner, certify his opinion and his reasons.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE NORTH GERMAN
CONFEDERATION. 16 APRIL, 1867.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE GERMAN EMPIRE.
16 APRIL, 1871.

[Translation in "British and Foreign State Papers," 1870-1871. The Translation is slightly modified. The adhesion of the South German States to the North German Confederation made no essential difference in its Constitution. The Constitution of the German Empire that was in force from 1871 to 1918, is printed here, and may be referred to for the provisions of the earlier Constitution.]

Constitution of the German Empire, Berlin, 16 April, 1871.

His Majesty the King of Prussia in the name of the North German Confederation, His Majesty the King of Bavaria, His Majesty the King of Wurtemberg, His Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Baden, and His Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Hesse and by Rhine, for those parts of the Grand Duchy of Hesse which are south of the river Main, conclude an everlasting Confederation for the protection of the territory of the Confederation and the rights thereof, as well as to care for the welfare of the German people. This Confederation will bear the name "German Empire," and is to have the following

CONSTITUTION.

1. Territory of the Confederation.

Art. I. The territory of the Confederation is comprised of the States of Prussia with Lauenburg, Bavaria, Saxony, Wurtemberg, Baden, Hesse, Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Saxe-Weimar, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Oldenburg, Brunswick, Saxe-Meiningen, Saxe-Altenburg, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Anhalt, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Schwarzburg-Sondershausen, Waldeck, Reuss Elder Line, Reuss Younger Line, Schaumburg-Lippe, Lippe, Lubeck, Bremen, and Hamburg.

2. Legislature of the Empire.

II. Within this confederate territory the Empire exercises the right of legislation according to the tenour of this Constitution, and with the effect that the Imperial laws take precedence of the laws of the States. The Imperial laws receive their binding power by their publication in the name of the Empire, which takes place by means of an Imperial Law Gazette. If the date of its first coming into force is not otherwise fixed in the published law, it comes into force on the 14th day after the close of the day on which the part of the Imperial Law Gazette which contains it is published at Berlin.

III. For entire Germany one common nationality exists with the effect that every person (subject, State-citizen) belonging to any one of the Confederated States is to be treated in every other of the Confederated States as a born native, and accordingly must be permitted to have a fixed dwelling, to trade, to be appointed to public offices, to acquire real estate property, to obtain the rights of a State-citizen, and to enjoy all other civil rights under the same presuppositions as the natives, and likewise is to be treated equally with regard to legal prosecution or legal protection.

No German may be restricted from the exercise of this right by the authorities of his own State or by the authorities of any of the other Confederated States.

Those regulations which have reference to the care of the poor and their admission into local parishes are not affected by the principles set down in the first paragraph.

Until further notice the Treaties likewise remain in force which have been entered into by the particular States of the Confederation regarding the reception of persons expelled, the care of sick persons, and the burial of deceased persons belonging to the States.

What is needful for the fulfilment of military duty in regard to the native country will be ordered by the way of Imperial legislation.

Every German has the same claim to the protection of the Empire with regard to foreign nations.

IV. The following affairs are subject to the superintendence and legislation of the Empire :

1. The regulations as to freedom of translocation, domicile and settlement affairs, right of citizenship, passport and police regulations for strangers, and as to transacting business including insurance affairs in so far as these objects are not already provided for by Article III of this Constitution. In Bavaria, however, the domicile and settlement affairs, and likewise the affairs of colonization and emigration to foreign countries are herefrom excluded.

2. The customs and commercial legislation and the taxes which are to be applied to the requirements of the Empire.

3. The regulation of the system of the coinage, weights and measures, likewise the establishment of the principles for the issue of funded and unfunded paper money ;

4. The general regulations as to banking ;

5. The granting of patents for inventions ;

6. The protection of intellectual property ;

7. The organisation of the common protection of German commerce in foreign countries, of German vessels and their flags at sea, and the arrangement of a common Consular representation, which is to be salaried by the Empire ;

8. Railway affairs,—excepting in Bavaria the arrangements in Article XLVI,—and the construction of land and water communications for the defence of the country and for the general intercourse ;

9. The rafting and navigation affairs on waterways belonging in common to several of the States, and the condition of the waterways, and likewise the river or other water dues ;

10. Postal and telegraph affairs ; in Bavaria and Wurtemberg, however, only with reference to the provisions of Article LII ;

11. Regulations as to the reciprocal execution of judgments in civil affairs and the settlement of requisitions in general ;

12. Likewise as to the verification of public documents ;

13. The general legislation as to obligatory rights, penal law, commercial and bill-of-exchange laws, and judicial procedure ;

14. The military and naval affairs of the Empire ;

15. The measures of medical and veterinary police ;

16. The regulations for the press and the right of association ;

V. The legislation of the Empire is carried on by the council of the Confederation and the Imperial Diet [Reichstag]. The accordance of the majority of votes in both Assemblies is necessary and sufficient for a law of the Empire.

In projects of law on military affairs, on naval affairs and on the taxes mentioned in Article XXXV, the President has the casting vote in cases where there is a difference of opinion, if his vote is in favour of the maintenance of the existing arrangements.

3. Council of the Confederation.

VI. The Council of the Confederation consists of the Representatives of the Members of the Confederation, amongst which the votes are divided in such a manner that Prussia has, with the former votes of Hanover, Electoral Hesse, Holstein, Nassau, and

Total . . .			58 votes.

Each member of the Confederation may nominate as many Plenipotentiaries to the Council of the Confederation as it has votes; but the totality of such votes can only be cast as a unit.

VII. The Council of the Confederation determines:

1. What Bills are to be brought before the Imperial Diet, and on the resolutions passed by the same;

2. As to the administrative measures and arrangements necessary for the general execution of the Imperial legislation, in so far as no other Imperial law has decreed to the contrary;

3. As to defects which have made themselves manifest in the execution of the Imperial laws or the above-mentioned measures and arrangements.

Every member of the Confederation has the right to propose bills and to introduce motions, and the Presidency is bound to bring them under debate.

The decisions take place by simple majority, with the reservation of the stipulations in the Articles V., XXXVII., and LXXVIII. Non-represented votes or votes without instructions are not counted. In equal divisions the Presidential is the casting vote.

In decisions upon affairs, wherein according to the rules of this Constitution, the whole Empire has not a common interest, only the votes of those Confederated States are counted which are interested in common.

VIII. The Council of the Confederation forms permanent Committees from its own members ;

1. For the land army and fortresses.
2. For naval affairs.
3. For customs and taxes.
4. For commerce and intercourse.
5. For railways, posts and telegraphs.
6. For affairs of justice.
7. For finance.

In each of these Committees, besides the Presidency, at least four of the Confederated States will be represented, and in the same each State only has one vote. In the Committee for the land army and fortresses, Bavaria has a perpetual seat, the other members thereof as well as the members for the Naval Committee are nominated by the Emperor ; the members of the other Committees are elected by the Council of the Confederation. The composition of these Committees is to be renewed for every session of the Council of the Confederation or respectively every year, when the outgoing members may be re-elected.

Besides these in the Council of the Confederation a Committee for Foreign Affairs will be formed, comprised of the representatives of the Kingdoms of Bavaria, Saxony, and Wurtemberg, and of two other representatives of other Confederated States, who will be yearly elected by the Council of the Confederation in which Committee Bavaria will preside.

The necessary officials will be placed at the disposal of these Committees.

IX. Every member of the Council of the Confederation has the right to appear in the Imperial Diet, and must at his desire at all times be heard, in order to represent the views of his Government, even when these views have not been adopted by the majority of the Council of the Confederation. No one may at the same time be a member of the Council of the Confederation and of the Imperial Diet.

X. The Emperor is bound to afford the usual diplomatic protection to the members of the Council of the Confederation.

4. The Presidency.

XI. The Presidency of the Confederation belongs to the King of Prussia, who bears the name of German Emperor. The Emperor has to represent the Empire internationally, to declare war, and to conclude peace in the name of the Empire, to enter into alliances and other Treaties with Foreign Powers, to accredit and to receive Ambassadors.

The consent of the Council of the Confederation is necessary for the declaration of war in the name of the Empire, unless an attack on the territory or the coast of the Confederation has taken place.

In so far as Treaties with Foreign States have reference to affairs which, according to Article IV., belong to the jurisdiction of the Imperial Legislature, the consent of the Council of the Confederation is requisite for their conclusion, and the sanction of the Imperial Diet for their coming into force.

XII. The Emperor has the right to summon, to open, to prorogue, and to close both the Council of the Confederation and the Imperial Diet.

XIII. The summoning of the Council of the Confederation, and of the Imperial Diet, takes place once each year, and the Council of the Confederation can be called together for preparation of business without the Imperial Diet being likewise summoned, whereas the latter cannot be summoned without the Council of the Confederation.

XIV. The Council of the Confederation must be summoned whenever one-third of the votes require it.

XV. The presidency in the Council of the Confederation and the direction of the business belongs to the Chancellor of the Empire, who is to be appointed by the Emperor.

The Chancellor of the Empire can be represented, on his giving written information thereof, by any other member of the Council of the Confederation.

XVI. The requisite motions, in accordance with the votes of the Council of the Confederation will be brought before the Imperial Diet in the name of the Emperor, where they will be supported by members of the Council of the Confederation, or by particular commissioners nominated by the latter.

XVII. The formulation and proclamation of the laws of the Empire, and the care of their execution, belongs to the Emperor. The Orders and Decrees of the Emperor are issued in the name of the Empire and require for their validity the counter-signature of the Chancellor of the Empire, who thereby undertakes the responsibility.

XVIII. The Emperor nominates the Imperial officials, receives their oath of allegiance to the Empire, and, when necessary, decrees their dismissal.

The officials of any State of the Confederation, when appointed to any Imperial office, are entitled to the same rights with respect to the Empire, as they would enjoy from their official position in their own state, excepting in such cases as have otherwise been provided for by Imperial legislation before their entrance into the Imperial service.

XIX. Whenever members of the Confederation do not fulfil their Constitutional duties towards the Confederation, they may be constrained to do so by way of execution. Such execution must be decreed by the Council of the Confederation, and be carried out by the Emperor.

5. Imperial Diet [Reichstag].

XX. The Imperial Diet is elected by universal and direct election with secret votes.

Until the legal arrangement reserved in § 5 of the Election Laws of 31 May, 1869 (Federal Law Gazette, 1869, page 145), has been made, there are to be elected—in Bavaria, 48; in Württemberg, 17; in Baden, 14; in Hesse, south of the Main, 6 members, and the total number of the members consists, therefore, of 382.

XXI. Officials do not require any leave of absence on entering into the Imperial Diet.

If any member of the Imperial Diet accepts any salaried appointment of the Empire, or of any State of the Confederation, or enters into any Imperial or State office to which a higher rank, or higher salary is attached, he loses his seat and service in the Diet, and can only regain his position in the same by re-election.

XXII. The proceedings of the Imperial Diet are public.

Accurate reports of the proceedings in the public sittings of the Imperial Diet are free from any responsibility.

XXIII. The Imperial Diet has the right to propose laws within the competency of the Empire, and to forward Petitions which have been addressed to it to the Council of the Confederation, or to the Chancellor of the Empire.

XXIV. The legislative period of the Imperial Diet is three years.¹ For a dissolution of the Imperial Diet within this period, a resolution of the Council of the Confederation, with the assent of the Emperor, is requisite.

XXV. In case of a dissolution of the Imperial Diet, the meeting of the electors must be called within a period of 60 days after such dissolution, and within a period of 90 days the Imperial Diet must be summoned.

XXVI. Without the assent of the Imperial Diet the prorogation of the same may not be extended over 30 days, nor repeated during the same session.

XXVII. The Imperial Diet scrutinises the legality of the credentials of its members and decides thereon. It regulates its own method of business and discipline by a business order, and elects its President, Vice-Presidents, and Secretaries.

XXVIII. The Imperial Diet decides by absolute majority of votes. The presence of a majority of the legal number of members is necessary for the validity of a resolution.

In voting on a matter which, according to the stipulations of this Constitution, is not common to the whole Empire, only the votes of those members will be counted who have been elected in those Confederate States to which the matter is common.¹

XXIX. The members of the Imperial Diet are representatives of the people as a whole, and are not bound by orders and instructions.

XXX. No member of the Imperial Diet can at any time be proceeded against, either judicially or by way of discipline, on account of his votes, or for expressions made use of in the exercise of his functions, nor can he be made responsible therefore in any way outside the assembly.

XXXI. Without the assent of the Imperial Diet, no member of the same may be placed under examination or arrested during the period of the session for any deed subject to punishment, except when taken in the act or in the course of the following day.

The same assent is needful in arrest for debt.

At the requisition of the Imperial Diet every correctional procedure against a member of the same, and all investigations or civil arrests must be relinquished for the duration of the period of the session.

XXXII. The members of the Imperial Diet must not receive any salary or indemnification in that capacity.

6. Customs and Commercial Affairs.

XXXIII. Germany forms one customs and commercial territory encircled by a common customs frontier. Those separate parts of territory are excluded, which from their position are not adapted for inclusion in the customs frontier.

All articles of free trade in any one of the States of the Confederation may be introduced into any other State of the Confederation, and can only be subjected to a duty in the latter in so far as similar articles produced in that State are subject to a home duty.

XXXIV. The Hanseatic towns Bremen and Hamburg, with so much of their own, or of the adjacent territory as may be needful for the purpose, remain as free ports outside the common customs frontier until they apply to be admitted therein.

XXXV. The Empire has the sole right of legislation in all Custom-House affairs, in the taxation of salt and tobacco produced in the territories of the Confederation, beer and spirit and sugar and syrup or other home productions made from beetroot, in the reciprocal protection against fraud of consumption duties raised in the separate States of the Confederation, as well as in such measures as the Customs' Committees may find requisite for the security of the common customs frontier.

In Bavaria, Wurtemberg and Baden, the taxation of the native spirit and beer remains for the present subject to the laws of the land. But the States of the Confederation will direct their efforts to bring about an assimilation in the taxation of these articles likewise.

XXXVI. The collection and administration of the duties and consumption taxes (Article XXXV.) remain in the hands of each State of the Confederation, within its own territory, in so far as they have hitherto been so.

The Emperor watches over the observance of the legal procedure through Imperial officials, whom he attaches to the customs or excise offices, and to the directing authorities of the separate States according to the advice of the Committee of the Council of the Confederation for customs and excise affairs.

Information given by these officials as to defects in the execution of the common legislation (Article XXXV.) will be laid before the Council of the Confederation for decision.

XXXVII. In decisions relative to the administrative instructions and arrangements (Article XXXV.) for the execution of the common legislation, the Presidency has the casting vote, when it is given for the continuance of the existing instruction or arrangement.

XXXVIII. The revenue from the duties mentioned in Article XXXV. and from the other taxes mentioned in so far as they are subject to Imperial legislation, flows into the Imperial Treasury.

This revenue consists of the whole income arising from the duties and other taxes after the deduction of :

1. The tax-compensations and abatements according to the laws or the general administrative regulations.
2. The repayments for incorrect levies.

(a) For the customs, the expenses which are requisite for the protection and the collection of the duties on that part of the frontiers situated towards foreign countries and in the border district.

(b) For the salt tax, the expenses which are incurred for the salaries of the officials who are employed in the salt works to collect and control that tax.

(c) For the beet-sugar and tobacco tax, the compensation which, according to the decisions of the Council of the Confederation from time to time, has to be made to the several Federal Governments for the expenses incurred in the administration of these taxes.

(d) For the other duties 15 per cent. of the total income.

The territories situated outside the common customs frontier pay an agreed sum towards defraying the expenses of the Empire.

Bavaria, Wurtemberg, and Baden, do not participate in the income flowing into the Imperial Treasury from the taxes on spirits and beer, nor in the corresponding part of the above-mentioned agreed payment.

XXXIX. The quarterly summaries which are to be made at the end of each quarter of the year by the collecting authorities of the Federal States, and the final statements to be made at the end of the year and the close of the books, of the income from duties and from consumption dues flowing into the Imperial Treasury according to Article XXXVIII., falling due during the quarter, or during the financial year, are to be collected into chief summaries, after previous examination, by the directing authorities of the Federal States, and therein each duty is to be separately shown; these summaries are to be sent in to the Committee of the Council of the Confederation for financial affairs.

On the basis of these summaries the said Committee makes out provisionally every three months, the amount due from the Treasury of each State of the Confederation, to the Imperial Treasury, and communicates these amounts to the Council of the Confederation, and to the States of the Confederation, it also presents the final statement of these amounts every year, with remarks, to the Council of the Confederation. The Council of the Confederation decides on this statement.

XL. The stipulations in the Zollverein Treaty of July 8, 1867, remain in force in so far as they have not been altered by the provisions of this Constitution, and so long as they are not altered in the way pointed out in Article VII., or Article LXXVIII.

7. Railway Affairs.

XLI. Railways which are considered necessary for the defence of Germany, or for the sake of the common intercourse, may, by virtue of an Imperial law, be constructed on account of the empire, even against the opposition of the members of the Confederation whose territory is intersected by the railways, but without prejudice to the prerogatives of any state. Concessions to execute the works may also be granted to private contractors, with the right of expropriation.

Every existing railway board of direction is bound to consent to the junction of newly constructed railways at the expense of the same.

The legal enactments which have granted a right of denial to existing railway undertakings against the construction of parallel or competing lines are hereby, without prejudice to rights already gained, repealed for the entire Empire. Nor can such a right of denial be ever granted again in concessions to be issued hereafter.

XLII. The Governments of the Confederation bind themselves to manage the German railways as a uniform network in the interest of the common intercourse, and likewise for this purpose to have all new railways which are to be made, constructed and fitted up according to uniform rules.

XLIII. For this purpose corresponding working arrangements are to be adopted with all possible dispatch, particularly with regard to railway police regulations. The Empire has likewise to take heed that the railway boards keep the lines at all times in such a state of repair as to ensure safety, and that they provide them with the working material necessary for the traffic.

XLIV. The railway boards are bound to introduce the necessary passenger trains of the proper speed for the through traffic, and for the arrangement of corresponding journeys, also the requisite trains to provide for the goods traffic; likewise to arrange direct expeditions for passengers and goods traffic, with permission for conveying the means of transport from one line to the other for the usual payments.

XLV. The Empire exercises the control over the tariffs, and will especially operate to the end:

1. That working regulations, in conformity with each other, be introduced as soon as possible on all German railroads;

2. That the greatest possible equalization and reduction of the tariffs shall take place, and particularly for greater distances an abatement of the tariffs for the transport of coals, coke, timber, ores, stones, salt, raw iron, manures, and similar articles, so as to be more in proportion to the necessities of agriculture and industry, and that the one pfennig tariff may be introduced as speedily as possible.

XLVI. In times of distress, particularly when an unusual dearth of the necessities of life occurs, the railway boards are bound to introduce a lower special tariff for the transport of grain, meal, pulse, and potatoes, temporarily, according to the necessity, as will be determined by the Emperor on the proposal of the respective committee of the Council of the Confederation, which tariff, however, must not be lower than the lowest rate already existing for raw produce on the said line.

The above, as well as the stipulations made in the Articles XLII. to XLV., are not applicable to Bavaria.

But the Empire has the right in regard to Bavaria likewise to lay down, by way of legislation, uniform rules for the construction and fitting up of the railways which are of importance for the defence of the country.

XLVII. The requisitions of the authorities of the Empire relative to making use of the railways for the purpose of the defence of Germany, must be obeyed without question by all the railway boards. In particular, the military and all materials of war are to be conveyed at equally reduced rates.

8. Postal and Telegraph Affairs.

XLVIII. The postal and telegraph affairs will be arranged and administered for the entire German Empire as uniform institutions for State intercourse.

The legislation of the Empire in postal and telegraphic affairs, as provided in Article IV., does not extend to those objects, the regulation of which, according to the principles which govern the North German Postal and Telegraphic Administration, has been left to definitive rules or administrative directions.

XLIX. The revenues of the postal and telegraphic service are in common for the entire Empire. The expenses will be defrayed from the common revenues. The surpluses flow into the Imperial Treasury (Section XII.).

L. The chief direction of the postal and telegraphic administration belongs to the Emperor. The officials appointed by him have the duty and the right to take care that uniformity in the organization of the administration and in carrying on the service, as well as in the qualification of the officials, be introduced and maintained.

The issue of definitive rules and general administrative directions, as well as the sole care of the relations with other postal and telegraphic offices, belongs to the Emperor.

All the officials of the postal and telegraphic administration are bound to obey the Imperial directions. This duty is to be recorded in the oath of service.

The appointment of the requisite principal officials for the administrative authorities of the post and telegraphic service in the various districts (such as directors, counsellors, chief inspectors), likewise the appointment of the officials acting as the agents of the before-mentioned functionaries, in the service of supervision, etc., in the separate districts (such as inspectors, controllers), proceeds, for the whole territory of the German Empire, from the Emperor, to whom these officials render the oath of service. Timely notice of the appointments in question, for the governmental approbation and publication, will be given to the Governments of the several States, so far as their territory is thereby concerned.

The other officials necessary for the post and telegraphic service, as well as all those required for the local or technical business, and therefore the officials, etc., acting at the actual place of business, will be appointed by the respective State Governments.

Where there is no independent State post, or telegraph administration, the provisions of the special Treaties supply the rule.

LI. In making over the balance of the postal administration for general Imperial purposes (Article XLIX.), in consideration of the previous difference in the net incomes obtained by the State postal administrations of the separate territories, the following proceeding is to be observed for the purpose of a corresponding arrangement during the undermentioned period of transition.

From the postal balances which have accrued in the separate postal districts during the five years, 1861 to 1865, an average yearly balance will be calculated, and the share which each separate postal district has had in the postal balance thus shown for the whole territory of the Empire, will be fixed according to percentages.

According to the proportion ascertained in this manner, the separate States will be credited for the next eight years after their entrance into the postal administration of the Empire, with such quotas as accrue to them from the postal balances produced in the Empire, in account with their other contributions for Imperial purposes.

At the expiration of the 8 years all distinctions cease, and the postal balances will flow in undivided account into the Imperial Treasury, according to the principle set forth in Article XLIX.

From the quotas of the postal surplus thus ascertained during the before-mentioned 8 years for the Hanseatic towns, one half will be placed beforehand every year at the disposal of the Emperor, for the purpose, in the first place, of paying therefrom the expenses for the establishment of normal postal institutions in the Hanseatic towns.

LII. The stipulations in the foregoing Articles XLVIII. to LI. have no application to Bavaria and Wurtemberg. In their place the following stipulations are in force for those two states of the Confederation.

To the Empire alone belongs the legislation as to the postal and telegraphic privileges, as to the legal relations between both institutions and the public, as to exemptions from postage and rates of postage, exclusively, however, of the rules and tariff regulations for the domestic circulation of Bavaria, and of Wurtemberg respectively, likewise under similar reservation the settlement of the fees for telegraphic correspondence.

In the same manner the regulation of the postal and telegraphic intercourse with foreign countries belongs to the Empire, excepting the direct intercourse of Bavaria, and of Wurtemberg themselves with the neighbouring States which do not belong to the Empire, the regulations as to which remain as stipulated in Article XLIX. of the Postal Treaty of 23 November, 1867.

Bavaria and Wurtemberg do not participate in the income flowing into the Imperial Treasury from the postal and telegraph service.

9. Shipping and Navigation.

LIII. The war navy of the Empire is one united navy under the chief command of the Emperor. The organization and composition thereof is the business of the Emperor, who appoints the naval officers and officials, and into whose service they and the men are to be sworn.

The Harbour of Kiel and that of Jahde are Imperial military harbours.

The necessary expenses for the establishment and maintenance of the war fleet, and the institutions in connection therewith, are paid from the Treasury of the Empire.

The whole of the maritime population of the Empire, including engineers and shipwrights, are free from service in the land army, but on the other hand, are bound to serve in the Imperial Navy.

The apportionment of the recruits is arranged according to the number of the maritime population, and the quota which each State thus contributes is deducted from the contingent to the land army.

LIV. The merchant vessels of all the States of the Confederation form one undivided commercial navy.

The Empire has to determine the method of ascertaining the burthen of sea-going vessels, to grant tonnage certificates, as well as to regulate other ship certificates, and to determine the conditions upon which the permit to command a sea-going vessel depends.

The merchant ships of all the States of the Confederation will be admitted and treated on equal terms in the seaports and in all the natural and artificial water-ways of the separate States of the Confederation. The dues to be levied in the seaports from sea-going vessels or their cargoes for using the appliances of navigation, must not exceed the expenses which are requisite for the maintenance and ordinary repairs of those appliances.

On all natural water-ways dues may only be levied for the use of such appliances as are especially intended for the furtherance of traffic. These dues, as well as the dues payable for making use of such artificial water-ways as are State property, must not exceed the expenses which are requisite for the maintenance and ordinary repairs of such erections and works. These regulations are also applicable to rafting so far as it takes place on navigable water-ways.

The imposing of other or higher dues on foreign ships, or their cargoes, than those paid by the ships of the Federal States does not belong to any single State, but solely to the Empire.

LV. The flag of the navy and of the mercantile marine is black-white-red.

10. Consular Service.

LVI. The whole of the Consular Service of the German Empire is under the superintendence of the Emperor, who appoints the Consuls after consultation with the Committee of the Council of the Confederation for Commerce and Traffic.

Within the official district of the German Consuls no new Consulates for separate States may be erected. The German Consuls exercise the functions of a national Consul for any State of the Confederation, not represented in their district. The whole of the existing Consulates for separate States are to be abolished as soon as the organization of the German Consulates is so completed, that the representation of the interests of all the States of the Confederation is recognized by the Council of the Confederation as secured by the German Consulates.

11. Military Affairs of the Empire.

LVII. Every German is liable to military service, and cannot have that service performed by substitute.

LVIII. The expenses and burdens of the whole of the military affairs of the Empire are to be borne equally by all of the States of the Confederation and those belonging to them, so that no preferences, or overburdening of any single States or classes, are in principle admissible. Where an equal division of the burdens is not practicable in natura, without prejudice to the public welfare, the matter is to be arranged on the principles of equity by means of legislation.

LIX. Every German capable of service belongs for 7 years to the standing army, as a rule from the completion of the twentieth to the commencement of the twenty-eighth year of his age; that is, for the first 3 of these years with the colours, and for the last 4 years in the reserve; then for the following 5 years of his life to the Landwehr. In those States of the Confederation wherein hitherto a longer period than 12 years of service altogether has been legal, the gradual reduction of such service can only take place in so far as regard for the readiness of the Imperial Army for war permits it.

With respect to the emigration of men belonging to the reserve only those regulations are to be applied which are in force for the emigration of men of the Landwehr.

LX. The effective strength of the German Army in peace is fixed till 31 December, 1871, at one per cent. of the population of the year 1867, and the separate States of the Confederation supply it pro rata. Subsequently the effective strength of the army in peace will be determined by Imperial legislation.

LXI. After the publication of this Constitution the whole Prussian Military Code of Laws is to be introduced throughout the Empire without delay, both the laws themselves and the regulations, instructions, and rescripts issued for the explanation and completion thereof, especially therefore the Military Penal Code of 3 April, 1845, the Military Court Martial Regulations of 3 April, 1845; the Ordinance upon Courts of Honour of 20 July, 1843; the regulations upon recruiting, time of service, allowance and maintenance affairs, billeting, compensations for damages to agriculture, mobilisation, etc., for war and peace. The military Church ritual is, however, excluded.

After the uniform war organization of the German army has been effected, a comprehensive military law for the Empire will be laid before the Imperial Diet and the Council of the Confederation for their constitutional decision.

LXII. To cover the outlay necessary for the entire German army, and the arrangements appertaining thereunto until 31 December, 1871, there are yearly to be placed at the disposal of the Emperor, as many times 225 thalers, in words two hundred and twenty-five thalers, as the poll-number of the peace strength of the army amounts to, according to Article LX. (See Section XII.)

After 31 December, 1871, these contributions must continue to be paid to the Imperial Treasury by each State of the Confederation. For the calculation thereof the effective strength in peace, as provisionally settled in Article LX., will be taken as the basis until it is altered by an Imperial law.

The expenditure of this sum for the entire Imperial Army and its arrangements will be determined on by the Estimate Law.

In settling the estimates of the military expenses the legal organization of the Imperial Army, as laid down in this Constitution, will be taken as the basis.

LXIII. The entire land force of the Empire will form a single army, which in war and peace is under the command of the Emperor.

The regiments, etc., bear running numbers for the entire German Army. For their clothing, the ground colours and fashion of the Royal Prussian Army are to be the model. It is left to the chiefs of the respective contingents to determine the external marks of distinction (cockades, etc.).

It is the duty and the right of the Emperor to take care that all the divisions of troops within the German Army are numerically complete and effective for war, and that unity in the organization and formation, in the armament and command, in the training of the men, as well as in the qualifications of the officers, be established and maintained. For this purpose the Emperor has the right to convince himself of the condition of the separate contingents at all times by inspection, and to order the reformation of any defects thereby discovered.

The Emperor determines the effective strength, the division and arrangement of the contingents of the Imperial Army, as well as the organization of the Landwehr, he also has the right of determining the garrisons within the territories of the Confederation, and to order the embodiment of any part of the Imperial Army in a state of preparation for war.

For the purpose of keeping up the indispensable uniformity in the administration, maintenance, armament, and equipment of all the divisions of troops of the German Army, the orders issued thereon in future for the Prussian Army will be communicated in a suitable manner, through the committee for the land army and fortresses mentioned in Article VIII., No. 1, to the commanders of the other Contingents for observance.

LXIV. All German troops are bound to obey the commands of the Emperor unconditionally. This duty is to be specified in the banner-oath.

The Commander-in-Chief of a contingent, likewise all officers who command troops of more than one contingent, and all commanders of fortresses are appointed by the Emperor. The officers appointed by the Emperor take the banner-oath to him. The appointments of Generals and officers acting as Generals within the contingents are at all times subject to the approbation of the Emperor.

The Emperor has the right, for purposes of transfer, with or without promotion, to select, for such appointments as are to be made by him in the Imperial Service, whether in the Prussian Army or in other contingents, from the officers of all the contingents of the Imperial Army.

LXV. The right of erecting fortresses within the territories of the Confederation belongs to the Emperor, who proposes, according to Section XII., the grant of the necessary means for the purpose, in so far as they are not provided for in the ordinary estimates.

LXVI. Where nothing to the contrary is stipulated by particular Conventions, the Sovereigns of the Confederation, or the Senates, appoint the officers of their contingents, subject to the restriction of Article LXIV. They are the chiefs of all the divisions of troops belonging to their territories, and enjoy the honours connected therewith. They have especially the right of inspection at all times, and receive, besides the regular reports and announcements of alterations which take place, timely information, for the purpose of Governmental publication, of all promotions or nominations among the respective divisions of the troops.

Likewise they have the right to make use, for purposes of police, not only of their own troops, but also to make requisition for any other division of troops of the Imperial Army which may be located in their territories.

LXVII. Unexpended balances from the military estimate do not belong under any circumstances to a single Government, but at all times to the Imperial Treasury.

LXVIII. The Emperor may, when the public safety is threatened in the territories of the Confederation, declare any part thereof to be in a state of war. Until the promulgation of an Imperial law, which will regulate the premisses, the form of publication and the effects of such a declaration, the rules of the Prussian law of 4 June, 1851, remain in force. (Collection of Laws for 1851, p. 451 & sqq.)

Final Stipulation to Section XI.

The provisions contained in this section come into force in Bavaria according to the special stipulations of the Treaty of Confederation, of 23 November, 1870 (Federal Law Gazette, 1871, p. 9), under III., § 5, and in Wurtemberg, according to the special stipulations of the Military Convention of 21 to 25 November, 1870 (Federal Law Gazette, 1870, p. 658).

12. Finances of the Empire.

LXIX. All the receipts and disbursements of the Empire must be estimated for each year, and be brought into the Imperial estimates. These are to be fixed by a law before the beginning of the financial year, according to the following principles.

LXX. To provide for all common expenses, any balances of the preceding year are first of all employed, and likewise the common revenues derived from the duties, the common consumption taxes, and from the postal and telegraph services. In so far as they cannot be provided for by these revenues, they are, as long as Imperial taxes are not introduced, to be met by contributions from the single States of the Confederation, in proportion to their population, which contributions to the amount estimated in the budget will be assessed by the Chancellor of the Empire.

LXXI. The common disbursements are, as a rule, voted for one year; they may, however, in particular cases, be voted for a longer period.

During the time of transition mentioned in Article LX., the estimates of the expenditure for the army, arranged under heads, are to be laid before the Council of the Confederation and the Imperial Diet only for their information and remembrance.

LXXII. The Chancellor of the Empire is to give account yearly to the Council of the Confederation and to the Imperial Diet of the application of all the incomes of the Empire, for discharge of responsibility.

LXXIII. In cases of extraordinary requirements, the contracting of a loan, also the undertaking of a guarantee on account of the Empire, may take place by Imperial legislation.

Final Stipulation to Section XII.

To the expenditure for the Bavarian army Articles LXIX. and LXXI. are only applicable in conformity with the stipulations of the Treaty of 23 November, 1870, mentioned in the final stipulation to Section XI., and Article LXXII. only so far that the assignment to Bavaria of the sums necessary for the Bavarian army is to be notified to the Council of the Confederation and to the Imperial Diet.

13. Settlement of Differences and Penal Stipulations.

LXXIV. Every undertaking against the existence, the integrity, the safety, or the Constitution of the German Empire; finally, insulting the Council of the Confederation or the Imperial Diet, or a member of the Council of the Confederation or of the Imperial Diet, or any authority, or a public functionary of the Empire, whilst in the exercise of their vocation, or in reference to their vocation, by word, in writing, printing, drawing, figurative or other representation, will be sentenced and punished in the separate States of the Confederation according to the existing law, or the laws which may in future be enacted there, in pursuance of which a similar offence committed against that separate State of the Confederation, its Constitution, its Chambers, or Diet, the members of its Chambers, or Diet, its authorities and functionaries, would be punished.

LXXV. For those undertakings against the German Empire, mentioned in Article LXXIV., which, if they had been undertaken against one of the separate States of the Confederation, would be qualified as high treason, or treason against the country, the Common Upper Court of Appeal of the three free and Hanseatic towns, at Lubeck, is the competent deciding authority in first and last instance.

The special regulations as to the competency and the procedure of the Upper Court of Appeal are to be settled by way of Imperial legislation. Until the promulgation of an Imperial law, the competency of the courts in the separate States of the Confederation, and the provisions relative to the procedure of these courts, remain as they have hitherto been.

LXXVI. Differences between various States of the Confederation, in so far as they are not of a private legal nature and therefore to be decided by the competent judicial authorities, will, at the suit of one of the parties, be settled by the Council of the Confederation.

Constitutional differences in those States of the Confederation in whose constitution no authority for settling such disputes is provided, are to be amicably arranged by the Council of the Confederation at the suit of one of the parties, or if this should not succeed, they are to be settled by way of Imperial legislation.

LXXVII. If, in a State of the Confederation, the case of a refusal of justice should occur, and sufficient aid cannot be obtained by way of law, it is the duty of the Council of the Confederation to take cognizance of the complaints as to the refused or hindered administration of the law when proved according to the Constitution and existing laws of the respective State of the Confederation, and thereupon to cause the Government of the Confederate State which has given occasion for the complaint, to afford judicial aid.

14. General Stipulations.

LXXVIII. Alterations in the Constitution take place by way of legislation. They are considered as rejected if they have 14 votes in the Council of the Confederation against them.

Those provisions of the Constitution of the Empire, by which certain rights are established for separate States of the Confederation in their relation to the community, can only be altered with the consent of the State of the Confederation entitled to those rights.

En cas d'intervention, les autorités fédérales veillent à l'observation des dispositions prescrites à l'article 5.

SPEECH OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE COLONIES (Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P.) ON INTRODUCING THE COMMONWEALTH OF AUSTRALIA BILL (Extracts). 14 MAY, 1900.

[Hansard's "Parliamentary Debates," 4th series, vol. 83 (1900), cols. 46-76. The whole speech and the ensuing debates on the Bill have been reprinted in "Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Bill. Debates in the Imperial Parliament with Appendices." London, Wyman, 1901.]

The SECRETARY OF STATE for the COLONIES (Mr. J. Chamberlain, Birmingham, W.):

This Bill, which is the result of the careful and prolonged labours of the ablest statesmen in Australia, enables that great island continent to enter at once the widening circle of English-speaking nations. No longer will she be a congeries of States, each of them separate from and entirely independent of the others, a position which anyone will see might possibly in the future, through the natural consequences of competition, become a source of danger and lead, at any rate, to friction and to weakness. But, if this Bill passes, in future Australia will be, in the words of the preamble of the Bill which I am about to introduce, "an indissoluble federal Commonwealth firmly united for many of the most important functions of government." After it has been passed there will be for Australia under one administration a uniform postal and telegraphic service, and provision is made making it possible hereafter for railway communication to be under similar control. In the meantime everything which has to do with the exterior relations of the six colonies concerned will be a matter for the Commonwealth, and not for the individual Governments; a common tariff will be established for all the colonies; there will be at the same time inter-colonial free trade, and what is perhaps more important than all, in future there will be a common form and a common control of national defences. Now, this is a consummation long expected and earnestly hoped for by the people of this country. We believe that it is in the interest of Australia, and that has always been with us the first consideration. But we recognize that it is also in our interest as well; we believe the relations between ourselves and those colonies will be simplified, will be more frequent and unrestricted, and, if it be possible, though I hardly think it is, will be more cordial when we have to deal with a single central authority instead of having severally to consult six independent Governments. Whatever is good for Australia is good for the whole British Empire. Therefore, we all of us— independently altogether of party, whether at home or in any other portion of the Empire—rejoice at this proposal, welcome the new birth of which we are witnesses, and anticipate for those great free and progressive communities a future even more prosperous than their past, and an honourable and important position in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race.

It would be absolutely impossible for me, within anything like a reasonable time, to refer to the multifarious details of this great measure, nor do I think it necessary to do so, because I cannot conceive that the House will be inclined to discuss these details in any critical spirit; but I might be allowed, and it would interest the House, I think, if I call attention to the general scope of the measure and to some of its most striking features. I think it is true to say that, on the whole, this new Constitution, although it is in important respects unlike every other constitution at present existing, still in the main, and more than any other, follows the Constitution of the United States of America. But it would be, perhaps, more interesting to us to contrast it with the Constitution of our own colony of Canada. The differences between the Constitution of the Dominion and the Constitution of the new Commonwealth are, I think, to be explained in a certain fundamental diversity in the position of the two colonies, and also in the methods by which the Constitution has been brought into existence. In the case of Canada, the delegates came here and the Constitution was settled here in conference with Her Majesty's Government, and was the result, to some extent at any rate, of their advice and suggestion. In the case of Australia, the people of Australia, through their representatives, have worked alone, without either inviting or desiring any assistance from outside. In Australia, it must also be remembered, the separate States have enjoyed for a much longer period than had the provinces of Canada complete independent self-governing existence, and, accordingly, while in Canada the people had before them at the time that the Constitution was decided upon the warning, I might almost say, afforded by the civil war in America of the danger of exaggerating State rights, and while the special provinces had no desire to put forward those rights in too emphatic a manner, in Australia there was no such example to fear, and the separate colonies had enjoyed for so long such great powers that they were naturally unwilling to part with them to anything like the same extent. Accordingly, while in Canada the result of the Constitution was substantially to amalgamate the provinces into one Dominion, the Constitution of Australia creates a federation for distinctly definite and limited objects of a number of independent States, and State rights have throughout been jealously preserved. In Canada everything that was not given expressly to the provinces went to the Central Government. In Australia the Central Government has only powers over matters which are expressly stated and defined in the Constitution. In Canada the Senate was a body which represented particular provinces substantially in proportion to their population. In Australia the Senate consists of six members from all the States—that is to say, an equal number, whatever may be the size or the population; and the mode of the election of the Senate is also different from that of Canada, and, I believe, entirely novel. In Canada the Senate was nominated for life on the advice of the Ministers. In the United States, as we all know, the Senate is elected by the Legislatures of the several States. In Australia the Senate is to be elected at the same election as the Lower House, but each State is to vote, not in the separate constituencies into which it is divided for the purposes of the Lower House, but as one constituency—a scrutin de liste, in fact, as the French call it—except in the case of Queensland, where there are to be two divisions. The Upper House is to serve for six years instead of three; but those are the only differences which separate it in composition, qualification, or constitution from the composition of the Lower House. The Lower House is to be elected according to the electoral laws of the several States, but according to population, and a very ingenious device has been resorted to in order to prevent the numbers of the Lower House from ever becoming excessive. It is provided by the Constitution that the members of the Lower House shall, as far as possible, be exactly double the numbers of the Upper House or Senate. I should add, perhaps, that the members of both Houses will be paid, and paid the same salary. There is also an example, which I cannot help thinking, might be wisely imitated by ourselves. Ministers on taking office do not vacate their seats. Then there is a most ingenious and complicated provision to prevent a possible deadlock between the two Houses; for although they are, as I have said, elected practically by the same constituency, I think it is evident that the differences in the manner of election may sometimes result in a diversity of opinion between the two chambers. In that case—and here, also, I cannot help thinking that hon. Members who are interested in the subject may find many useful suggestions—the course of the operation is this. Measures may be twice rejected by the Senate, as I understand, in two separate sessions of Parliament. After that the Government may dissolve both Houses. Both Houses will be re-elected at the same time. If after that re-election the Senate should again—a third time—reject a measure, then there is to be a joint sitting of both Houses, and a decision is to be taken by a simple majority of both Houses. That applies to the case of ordinary measures, but, if the question between the two Houses is an amendment of the Constitution, then a somewhat different course is followed. The proposed amendment may be twice rejected by the Senate, and if after that the Houses do not come to an agreement, then the amendment will be settled by means of a referendum, and is to be decided by the majority of votes in a majority of the States. Now, to this new Parliament so constituted thirty-nine distinct subjects have been expressly referred. Amongst them are the tariff, post office, and telegraph services, defence, currency, bankruptcy, marriage and divorce, and old-age pensions, and also the following matters—to which I call special attention because they involve interest outside Australia as well as locally—first, the fisheries in Australian waters, beyond the territorial limits of Australia; secondly, copyright; thirdly, legislation dealing with the people of any race not being natives of either of the States (I think that has in view legislation in regard to Asiatics); fourthly, “external affairs,” a phrase of great breadth and vagueness, which, unless interpreted and controlled by some other provision, might easily, it will be seen, give rise to serious difficulties; and, fifthly, the relations with the islands of the Pacific, which also involves, of course, many questions in which foreign nations are concerned. It will be seen that almost all the points to which I have thus called special attention are matters in which the Imperial Government may have to deal with foreign countries. It is important, therefore—I say this in passing, although I shall deal with it more at length—it is important that measures of this kind, which may involve the Imperial Government in the most serious responsibility, should be interpreted by a tribunal in which all parties have confidence. There are also in the Bill some complicated provisions for dealing with the division of the receipts from Customs among the several States, for the imposition of new duties, and the division of old ones. I have mentioned, at all events, the most important and the most interesting matters which are raised by this Bill, and I think it is evident from even this very brief and inadequate résumé that there are a great number of propositions in the Bill which, if it were a case of freely discussing a Constitution of our own, would arouse much difference of opinion. If we had been invited to frame a Constitution, or if we had been consulted after the Constitution had been framed, it is quite possible—I do not say it would have been so—it is quite possible we might have had many suggestions to make and some amendments to offer. But that is not the position. The Bill has been prepared without reference to us. It represents substantially and in most of its features the general opinion of the Australian people; and although I differ totally from those who have said that the Australian people do not desire that this great measure, the result of the labour of their representatives, should receive in the Imperial Parliament the fullest consideration and even the fullest discussion; although I deny altogether that the Australian people have ever considered, or shown that they consider, the Imperial Parliament as merely a Court for the registration of their decrees; and although I am convinced that the Australian people will be neither offended nor insulted if we alter here a word or there a word, or even a clause, in this Bill, I think, on the other hand, they do expect that we shall have a reasonable regard to the labours which they have already expended upon this measure, and to the general feeling of the Australian people, wherever it has been really and conclusively shown, and to those rights of self-government of which they have made so magnificent a use and which we have so freely and gladly conceded. Now, it is therefore on these main principles that the Government have proceeded in dealing with this Bill. On the one hand, we have accepted without demur, and we shall ask the House of Commons to accept, every point in this Bill, every word, every line, every clause, which deals exclusively with the interests of Australia. We may be vain enough to think that we might have made improvements for the advantage of Australia, but we recognize that they are the best judges in their own case, and we are quite content that the views of their representatives should be in these matters accepted as final; and the result of that is that the Bill which I hope to present to the House to-night is, so far as ninety-nine-hundredths of it, I think I might almost say nine hundred and ninety-nine thousandths of it is concerned—as regards the vast proportion of the Bill—exactly the same as that which passed the referendum of the Australian people. But the second principle which I ask the House to assent to, and to which we have given application by certain amendments we have made in the Bill, is that wherever the Bill touches the interests of the Empire as a whole, or the interests of Her Majesty's subjects, or of Her Majesty's possessions outside Australia, the Imperial Parliament occupies a position of trust which it is not the desire of the Empire, and which I do not believe for a moment it is the desire of Australia, that we should fulfil in any perfunctory or formal manner. As I say, we have applied these principles in dealing with the Bill. Two colonies—Western Australia and New Zealand—appealed to Her Majesty's Government, and were represented here by special delegates, and asked us to interfere to secure for them certain amendments in the Bill. I may say Her Majesty's Government were inclined to sympathize with the desire of both these colonies. Her Majesty's Government would have been very glad indeed could their wishes have been complied with; but, as we considered that it was an entirely Australian question, as it was a difference of opinion arising between the Australian colonies, in which neither the Empire nor the mother country were themselves directly concerned, we felt we were not justified in pressing these claims, or in insisting upon securing their adoption as against the majority of the colonies in Australia. Western Australia asked for the right to come in as an original State, on terms slightly different from those provided in the Constitution. The differences arose as to the question of tariffs; and undoubtedly it was admitted by the five federating colonies, that, owing to the peculiar position of Western Australia, she was entitled to some period of interval before she adopted the common tariff of the Commonwealth; and accordingly five years were allowed her for that purpose, subject to the condition that each year one-fifth of any difference that might exist between the tariff of Western Australia and the tariff of the Commonwealth should be reduced. I confess that it seemed to me that a condition of that kind imposed, and I still think it imposes, on the financial system of Western Australia a very considerable strain. I do not envy the position of the Chancellor of the Exchequer who is beforehand tied down by a statutory and Constitutional law to reduce his tariff by one-fifth in every successive year for five years to come. It is perfectly evident that that must interfere to a considerable extent with the production of his annual budget. But, as I have said, having appealed to the Premiers, and having put forward the views of Western Australia, and having received from them the statement that they did not feel justified in assenting to any amendments, we reported the result of our inquiries to Sir John Forrest, the highly-respected Premier of Western Australia ; and we ventured—although it was perhaps hardly our business—in the interest, as we believed, of Australia as a whole and even of Western Australia, to press upon him that his Government should now reconsider their position, and that in spite of the arrangements of which they complained they should seek to enter the Federation as an original State. I am very happy to say—as will be seen by the Blue-book which I have laid upon the table—that Sir John Forrest and his Government have assented to our request to take this step. Their Parliament will be shortly called together ; and I hope the result will be that the Constitution will be submitted to the people of Western Australia, and that Her Majesty's Government will be able to proclaim the whole of the six colonies of Australia as taking part in this great scheme. The colony of New Zealand made several requests to us. Two of these were, I think, of minor importance. They were that they should have access to the Supreme Court of the new Federation, and that some arrangement should be made at once for common defence. We considered that there would be no difficulty in dealing with these very important questions as between New Zealand and the Federated Commonwealth after it was formed, and that it was unnecessary to delay the Commonwealth during the discussion of matters which, no doubt, would require a considerable amount of time. The third proposal was that New Zealand should be allowed to enter as an original State at any time within the next seven years—I do not know that the period of seven years was a definite part of the proposition ; but, at all events, a considerable period was to be given to them to make their choice. I confess that here also

I should have been very glad if the Premiers had seen their way to accept the suggestion. The delegates, however, who were representing the five federating colonies explained, very ably, the difficulties that would arise from such a state of things. They pointed out that great inconvenience might be suffered, especially with regard to the establishment of a tariff, if the federating colonies were under a sort of compulsion to accept another partner at any time during a long period. . . .

I now come to the points upon which we think amendment to be necessary. Substantially there is only one point of importance, but in order that I may be perfectly accurate I will mention others, as to which, I think, there will probably be very little debate or opposition. . . . [Admission of Western Australia. Consequential amendments.] . . .

Then, in the third place, there is a matter of more importance, though I am happy to say it is one on which there is no division of opinion. We propose to make clear in the Bill the application of the Colonial Laws Validity Act to the Commonwealth. . . .

Now I come to what I have described as the substantial point of alteration, which of course is the point affecting the question of appeal. This is the only point, I think, on which there can possibly be any important subject of controversy or difference of opinion between ourselves and the Australian representatives. . . .

We have got to a point in our relations with our self-governing colonies in which I think we recognize, once for all, that these relations depend entirely on their free will and absolute consent. The links between us and them at the present time are very slender. Almost a touch might snap them. But, slender as they are, and slight as they are, although we wish, although I hope, that they will become stronger, still if they are felt irksome by any one of our great colonies, we shall not attempt to force them to wear them. One of these ancient links is precisely this right of appeal by every subject of Her Majesty to the Queen in Council. The Bill weakens that—there is no doubt about that—and thereby there opens up, as I shall show, a prospect of causes of friction and irritation between the colonies and ourselves which, in my opinion, would be more numerous and more serious than anything that is likely to result if the right of appeal is retained. Well, how shall we deal with this question? I am sure that the House will feel that there is no man in the House who is more anxious to maintain the good feeling between ourselves and our colonies than I am. Ever since I have been in office, that has been my chief desire. Sir, in a case of this kind nothing is more easy than to concede; nothing is more difficult than to refuse. At the same time, believing firmly, as the Government do, that what is asked for in this Bill, as it originally came to us, is not only injurious to the best interests of Australia, but that it would lead to complications which might be destructive of good relations and prejudicial to the unity of the Empire, we feel that we are bound to ask the House to reconsider it. Sir, we believe further—and this is an important point—that opinion has not yet been definitely formed on the subject in Australia, and before, therefore, assenting to a change which may have such serious results, we hold it will be our duty to be quite certain that the demand is a demand that has behind it the whole force of Australian opinion. Now, the new clause, Clause 74, as submitted, would allow no appeal in any matter involving the Federal Constitution, or the constitution of a State, unless the “public interests” of some part of Her Majesty’s dominions other than Australia are involved; and it further provides—a matter to which sufficient attention has not been directed—that the Federal Parliament may in the future make laws limiting further the matters on which appeal is to lie. Now, the right hon. Gentleman the Member for East Fife [Right Hon. H. H. Asquith], unless he has been misrepresented, said that the Bill did not take away any right already existing. He will find that that is a mistake. It does take away the right of appeal from a State where the State Constitution is in question; and that right exists at the present time. And further, as I have pointed out, by a proposal in this solemn instrument expressly to authorize the newly created Parliament to further limit the right of appeal, it almost makes it impossible for Her Majesty in future, in reference to this subject, to exercise the right of veto which, of course, is inherent in the prerogative.

I go on to another point to which I wish to call attention. Although this Bill does not in direct terms limit the right of veto, which is a right,—although undoubtedly reserved to the Crown, which must, nevertheless, always be exercised with the most scrupulous care and consideration—although it does not take away that right, it would make it almost a stultification on the part of Her Majesty if the Crown were advised to exercise that right in a matter which we had expressly referred and delegated to the new Parliament. Now, these are the proposals. What are the main objections to these proposals?

In 1871 it appears a question was raised at the instigation of some of the Australian colonies, and then the Privy Council in their memorandum said—

“The appellate jurisdiction of Her Majesty in Council exists for the benefit of the Colonies, and not for that of the mother country ; but it is impossible to overlook the fact that this jurisdiction is part of Her Majesty's prerogative, and which has been exercised for the benefit of the Colonies since the date of their settlement. It is still a powerful link between the Colonies and the Crown of Great Britain, and secures to every subject throughout the Empire the right to claim redress from the Throne. It provides a remedy in many cases not falling within the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts of justice. It removes causes from the influence of local prepossession ; it affords the means of maintaining the uniformity of the law of England and her Colonies which derive a great body of their laws from Great Britain, and enables them, if they think fit, to obtain a decision in the last resort, from the highest judicial authority, composed of men of the greatest legal capacity in the metropolis.”

The Australian colonies in 1871 recognized the validity of these reasons, and the matter was allowed to drop. It was raised again in 1875, [after] the passing of the Act by which the Dominion of Canada was created ; and again the Privy Council pointed out that—

“this power had been exercised for centuries over all the dependencies of the Empire by the Sovereign of the mother country sitting in Council. By this institution, common to all parts of the Empire beyond the seas, all matters whatever requiring a judicial solution may be brought to the cognisance of one Court in which all have a voice. To abolish this controlling power and abandon each colony and dependency to a separate Court of Appeal of its own, would obviously destroy one of the most important ties connecting all parts of the Empire in common obedience to the courts of law, and renounce the last and most essential mode of exercising the authority of the Crown over its possessions abroad."

There are other reasons, besides these which are stated by the Privy Council, which we have now to bear in mind. This Constitution is to be an Imperial Act, and it is, in substance, the delegation of powers to an authority which is created by the Imperial Parliament. Is it reasonable that when questions arise, as they certainly will arise, as to the interpretation of the powers of the clause by which this authority is delegated, the Imperial power which made the delegation shall not be represented upon the Court which is to give a decision? Then, Sir, there is another point. The terms of the clause are such as certainly to introduce confusion where uniformity is most desired. No appeal is to lie except where the "public interests" of a portion of Her Majesty's dominions outside Australia are concerned. The advice which I have received on the subject goes to show that there may be endless litigation as to the precise nature of the cases in which public interests will arise.

Lastly, there is also the question, to which I have already referred, that the Constitution empowers the new Parliament to deal with maritime jurisdiction, with the Pacific islands, with foreign enlistments, and with external affairs. The responsibility for the action of the Parliament of Australia and its legislation rests with us. We may be brought into a hostile position in regard to any foreign country in consequence of the action of the Colonial Court. Is it reasonable that while we still undertake to co-operate with the colonies in their defence, while the whole strength of the Empire would be brought to bear in order to protect the interests of the colonies—is it reasonable that the question whether or not their Parliament has gone beyond the powers delegated to it, in some matter in which a foreign country—not one of Her Majesty's possessions—is concerned, should be settled without an appeal to the Privy Council? For these and other reasons—but I have stated the principal ones—Her Majesty's Government, as soon as they obtained the Bill from the Premiers, were desirous of making some amendments.

It has been recognized by none more strongly or more eloquently than by the delegates themselves that the position of the Imperial Parliament is that of trustee for the Empire, and that although the policy of reconstruction may be a different matter, the right of reconstruction undoubtedly rests with us. If, therefore, it were a fact that Australia as a whole was absolutely united on this question, if the clause exactly as it stands had been taken as the irrevocable and final decision of the Governments and the people of Australia, our position would no doubt be a very delicate and very difficult one, because, . . ., we recognize fully the unwisdom—I had almost said the impossibility—of pressing views on great self-governing communities to which they are absolutely opposed. . . . Fortunately Her Majesty's Government are not placed in this difficult position. . . . There is no such unanimity as should make us hesitate in a matter of this vast importance, at all events to take time, and for the present, at any rate, retain the right, of appeal . . . as [it] is now enjoyed by Canada, South Africa and India¹ . . .

SCHEDULE.

1. After the transfer of the government of any territory belonging to or under the protection of His Majesty, the Governor-General in Council shall be the legislative authority, and may by proclamation make laws for the peace, order, and good government of such territory: Provided that all such laws shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within seven days after the issue of the proclamation or, if Parliament be not then sitting, within seven days after the beginning of the next session, and shall be effectual unless and until both Houses of Parliament shall by resolutions passed in the same session request the Governor-General in Council to repeal the same, in which case they shall be repealed by proclamation.

2. The Prime Minister shall be charged with the administration of any territory thus transferred, and he shall be advised in the general conduct of such administration by a commission consisting of not fewer than three members with a secretary, to be appointed by the Governor-General in Council, who shall take the instructions of the Prime Minister in conducting all correspondence relating to the territories, and shall also under the like control have custody of all official papers relating to the territories.

3. The members of the commission shall be appointed by the Governor-General in Council, and shall be entitled to hold office for a period of ten years, but such period may be extended to successive further terms of five years. They shall each be entitled to a fixed annual salary, which shall not be reduced during the continuance of their term of office, and they shall not be removed from office except upon addresses from both Houses of Parliament passed in the same session praying for such removal. They shall not be qualified to become, or to be, members of either House of Parliament. One of the members of the commission shall be appointed by the Governor-General in Council as vice-chairman thereof. In case of the absence, illness, or other incapacity of any member of the commission, the Governor-General in Council may appoint some other fit and proper person to act during such absence, illness, or other incapacity.

4. It shall be the duty of the members of the commission to advise the Prime Minister upon all matters relating to the general conduct of the administration of, or the legislation for, the said territories. The Prime Minister, or another minister of State nominated by the Prime Minister to be his deputy for a fixed period, or, failing such nomination, the vice-chairman, shall preside at all meetings of the commission, and in case of an equality of votes shall have a casting vote. Two members of the commission shall form a quorum. In case the commission shall consist of four or more members, three of them shall form a quorum.

5. Any member of the commission who dissents from the decision of a majority shall be entitled to have the reasons for his dissent recorded in the minutes of the commission.

6. The members of the commission shall have access to all official papers concerning the territories, and they may deliberate on any matter relating thereto and tender their advice thereon to the Prime Minister.

7. Before coming to a decision on any matter relating either to the administration, other than routine, of the territories or to legislation therefor, the Prime Minister shall cause the papers relating to such matter to be deposited with the secretary to the commission, and shall convene a meeting of the commission for the purpose of obtaining its opinion on such matter.

8. Where it appears to the Prime Minister that the despatch of any communication or the making of any order is urgently required, the communication may be sent or order made, although it has not been submitted to a meeting of the commission or deposited for the perusal of the members thereof. In any such case the Prime Minister shall record the reasons for sending the communication or making the order and give notice thereof to every member.

9. If the Prime Minister does not accept a recommendation of the commission or proposes to take some action contrary to their advice, he shall state his views to the commission, who shall be at liberty to place on record the reasons in support of their recommendation or advice. This record shall be laid by the Prime Minister before the Governor-General in Council, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

10. When the recommendations of the commission have not been accepted by the Governor-General in Council, or action not in accordance with their advice has been taken by the Governor-General in Council, the Prime Minister, if thereto requested by the commission, shall lay the record of their dissent from the decision or action taken and of the reasons therefor before both Houses of Parliament, unless in any case the Governor-General in Council shall transmit to the commission a minute recording his opinion that the publication of such record and reasons would be gravely detrimental to the public interest.

11. The Governor-General in Council shall appoint a resident commissioner for each territory, who shall, in addition to such other duties as shall be imposed on him, prepare the annual estimates of revenue and expenditure for such territory, and forward the same to the secretary to the commission for the consideration of the commission and of the Prime Minister. A proclamation shall be issued by the Governor-General in Council, giving to the provisions for revenue and expenditure made in the estimates as finally approved by the Governor-General in Council the force of law.

12. There shall be paid into the Treasury of the Union all duties of customs levied on dutiable articles imported into and consumed in the territories, and there shall be paid out of the Treasury annually towards the cost of administration of each territory a sum in respect of such duties which shall bear to the total customs revenue of the Union in respect of each financial year the same proportion as the average amount of the customs revenue of such territory for the three completed financial years last preceding the taking effect of this Act bore to the average amount of the whole customs revenue for all the Colonies and territories included in the Union received during the same period.

13. If the revenue of any territory for any financial year shall be insufficient to meet the expenditure thereof, any amount required to make good the deficiency may, with the approval of the Governor-General in Council, and on such terms and conditions and in such manner as with the like approval may be directed or prescribed, be advanced from the funds of any other territory. In default of any such arrangement, the amount required to make good any such deficiency shall be advanced by the Government of the Union. In case there shall be a surplus for any territory, such surplus shall in the first instance be devoted to the repayment of any sums previously advanced by any other territory or by the Union Government to make good any deficiency in the revenue of such territory.

14. It shall not be lawful to alienate any land in Basutoland or any land forming part of the native reserves in the Bechuanaland protectorate and Swaziland from the native tribes inhabiting those territories.

15. The sale of intoxicating liquor to natives shall be prohibited in the territories, and no provision giving facilities for introducing, obtaining, or possessing such liquor in any part of the territories less stringent than those existing at the time of transfer shall be allowed.

16. The custom, where it exists, of holding pitsos or other recognised forms of native assembly shall be maintained in the territories.

17. No differential duties or imposts on the produce of the territories shall be levied. The laws of the Union relating to customs and excise shall be made to apply to the territories.

18. There shall be free intercourse for the inhabitants of the territories with the rest of South Africa subject to the laws, including the pass laws, of the Union.

19. Subject to the provisions of this Schedule, all revenues derived from any territory shall be expended for and on behalf of such territory: Provided that the Governor-General in Council may make special provision for the appropriation of a portion of such revenue as a contribution towards the cost of defence and other services performed by the Union for the benefit of the whole of South Africa, so, however, that that contribution shall not bear a higher proportion to the total cost of such services than that which the amount payable under paragraph 12 of this Schedule from the Treasury of the Union towards the cost of the administration of the territory bears to the total customs revenue of the Union on the average of the three years immediately preceding the year for which the contribution is made.

20. The King may disallow any law made by the Governor-General in Council by proclamation for any territory within one year from the date of the proclamation, and such disallowance on being made known by the Governor-General by proclamation shall annul the law from the day when the disallowance is so made known.

21. The members of the commission shall be entitled to such pensions or superannuation allowances as the Governor-General in Council shall by proclamation provide, and the salaries and pensions of such members and all other expenses of the commission shall be borne by the territories in the proportion of their respective revenues.

22. The rights as existing at the date of transfer of officers of the public service employed in any territory shall remain in force.

23. Where any appeal may by law be made to the King in Council from any court of the territories, such appeal shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, be made to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of South Africa.

24. The Commission shall prepare an annual report on the territories, which shall, when approved by the Governor-General in Council, be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

25. All bills to amend or alter the provisions of this Schedule shall be reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure.

THE GERMAN CONSTITUTION, 1919.¹

[“British and Foreign State Papers,” vol. 112 (1919), pp. 1063-1094.

An accessible translation is that published by H.M. Stationery Office, 1919. Extracts from this version are given below.]

This Constitution has been framed by the united German people, inspired by the determination to restore and establish their Federation upon a basis of liberty and justice, to be of service to the cause of peace both at home and abroad, and to promote social progress.

PART I.

CONSTRUCTION AND DUTIES OF THE FEDERATION.

FEDERATION AND STATES.

Article 1.

The German Federation is a Republic.

The supreme power proceeds from the people.

Article 2.

The Federal territory consists of the territories of the German States. Other territories may, by Federal law, be admitted within the Federation, if desired by their population, in virtue of the right of self-determination.

¹A declaration that all provisions of their Constitution which are in contradiction with the terms of the Treaty of Peace are null and void, was signed on the 22nd September, 1919, at Paris by the acting Head of the German Delegation.

Article 3.

The Federal colours are black, red and gold. The commercial flag is black, white and red, with the Federal colours in the upper inside corner.

Article 4.

The universally recognized rules of International Law are valid as binding constituent parts of German Federal Law.

Article 5.

The executive power is exercised in Federal affairs through the institutions of the Federation, in virtue of the Federal constitution, and in State affairs by the officials of the States, in virtue of the constitutions of the States.

Article 6.

The Federal Government has sole legislative power as regards :

1. Foreign relations ;
2. Colonial affairs ;
3. Nationality, right of domicile, immigration, emigration and extradition ;
4. Military organization ;
5. The monetary system ;
6. The customs department, as well as uniformity in the sphere of customs and trade, and freedom of commercial intercourse ;

Article 8.

Further, the Federal Government has legislative power as regards taxes and other sources of revenue, in so far as they are claimed wholly or in part for Federal purposes. Where the Federal Government demands taxes or other sources of revenue hitherto appertaining to the various States, it must take into consideration the maintenance of the vitality of those States.

Article 9.

Where there is need for the issue of uniform regulations, the Federal Government has legislative power as regards :

1. Sanitary administration ;
2. The maintenance of public order and safety.

Article 10.

In the course of legislation, the Federal Government may draw up regulations for :

1. The rights and duties of religious societies ;
2. Public instruction, including universities, and the department of scientific literature ;
3. The rights of the officials of all public corporations ;
4. The land laws, the distribution of land, questions regarding colonization settlements, the tenure of landed property, the housing question and the distribution of the population ;
5. Questions regarding burial.

Article 11.

In the course of legislation, the Federal Government may draw up regulations as to the admissibility and mode of collection of State taxes, in so far as they are requisite for the purpose of preventing :—

1. Loss of revenue or action prejudicial to the commercial relations of the Federation ;
 2. Double taxation ;
 3. Charges for the use of public lines of communication and their accessories, which are excessive, and constitute a hindrance to traffic ;
 4. Assessments which are prejudicial to imported goods, as opposed to home products, in dealings between the separate States and parts of a State, or
 5. Bounties on exportation,
- or for the protection of important social interests.

Article 12.

So long and in so far as the Federal Government does not make use of its legislative power, the States retain that power for themselves. This does not apply to the exclusive legislative power of the Federal Government.

The Federal Government has the right of veto in respect of any laws of a State which refer to subjects included in Article 7, paragraph 13, in so far as the welfare of the community in general is thereby affected.

Article 13.

Federal law overrides State law. Where there exists any doubt or difference of opinion as to whether a regulation of State law is compatible with Federal law, an appeal may be made by the competent Federal or State authorities to the decision of the highest tribunal of the Federation for a more exact interpretation of the Federal law.

Article 14.

Federal laws are carried into execution by the State authorities, unless these laws decree otherwise.

Article 15.

The Federal Government exercises control in those affairs in which it holds the legislative power.

In so far as Federal laws are carried into execution by State authorities, the Federal Government may issue general instructions. For the purpose of supervision of the execution of Federal laws, the Government is empowered to despatch commissioners to the State central authorities, and, with their consent, to the subordinate authorities.

It is the duty of the State Governments, at the request of the Federal Government, to remedy defects observed in the execution of Federal laws. In case of differences of opinion, both the Federal Government and the State Government may appeal to the decision of the Supreme Court of Judicature, where no other court has been determined by Federal law.

Article 16.

Officials entrusted with the direct Federal administration in the various States shall, as a rule, be natives of the State in question. Officials, employees and workmen of the Federal administration shall, if they desire it, be employed as far as possible in their native districts, unless considerations of training or the exigencies of the service are opposed to this course.

Article 17.

Each State must have a republican constitution. The representatives of the people must be elected by the universal, equal, direct and secret suffrage of all men and women of the German Federation, upon the principles of proportional representation. The State Government requires the confidence of the people's representatives.

The principles underlying elections of the people's representatives apply also to municipal elections. By a State law the qualification for a vote may, however, be declared conditional upon a year's residence in the district.

Article 18.

The organization of the Federation into States shall serve the best economic and educational interests of the people, with all due consideration for the will of the population concerned. Alteration of the territory of the States, and the formation of new States within the Federation, shall be effected by means of a Federal law making an alteration in the constitution.

Where the States concerned give their direct consent, a simple Federal law suffices.

A simple Federal law suffices also, in a case where the consent of one of the States concerned has not been obtained, but where an alteration of territory or reorganization is demanded by the will of the population and required by paramount Federal interests.

The will of the population shall be ascertained by voting. The Federal Government orders the taking of the vote, when demanded by one-third of those inhabitants of the territory to be separated, who are entitled to vote for the Reichstag.

For the determination of an alteration or reorganization of territory, the proportion of votes required is three-fifths of the number cast, or, at the least, a majority of the votes of persons qualified. Even when it is a question of the separation of only a portion of a Prussian administrative area (Regierungsbezirk), a Bavarian district (Kreis), or of a corresponding administrative district (Verwaltungsbezirk) in other States, the will of the population of the whole district in question shall be ascertained. Should the area of the territory to be separated and that of the whole district (Bezirk) not coincide, the will of the population of the former may, by means of a special Federal law, be declared sufficient.

The consent of the population having been obtained, the Federal Government shall lay before the Reichstag a law in accordance with the decision.

In the case of union or separation, should any dispute arise on the question of arrangements as to property, the decision on such points shall be given, upon an application from one party, by the Supreme Court of Judicature of the German Federation.

Article 19.

Constitutional controversies within a State in which no court exists for their settlement, as well as disputes not of a private nature, between different States or between the Federation and a State, shall be decided, upon an application from one of the parties, by the Supreme Court of Judicature for the German Federation, where it is not the business of another Federal tribunal.

The Federal President of the Federation carries out the decision of the Supreme Court of Judicature.

THE REICHSTAG.

Article 20.

The Reichstag is an Assembly composed of the deputies of the German people.

Article 21.

The deputies are representatives of the whole people. They are subject to their conscience only, and not bound by any mandates.

Article 22.

The deputies are elected by the universal, equal, direct and secret suffrage of all men and women above the age of 20, upon the principles of proportional representation. Elections must take place on a Sunday, or a public holiday.

Details are determined by the Federal election law.

Article 23.

The Reichstag is elected for four years. The general election must take place not later than sixty days after dissolution. The Reichstag must assemble not less than thirty days after the election.

Article 24.

The Reichstag assembles annually on the first Wednesday in November at the seat of the Federal Government. The President of the Reichstag must summon it earlier, if requested by the President of the Federation or by at least one-third of the members. The Reichstag determines the conclusion of the session and the day of re-assembly.

Article 25.

The President of the Federation may dissolve the Reichstag, but only once for any one reason. The general election will take place not later than sixty days after the dissolution.

Article 26.

The Reichstag elects the President, his Deputy and Secretary, and draws up its Standing Orders.

Article 27.

Between two sessions or elective periods the President and Deputy of the last session remain in office.

Article 28.

The President exercises domestic and police authority within the Reichstag buildings. He is responsible for the administration of the House ; regulates receipts and expenditure in proportion to the requirements of the Federal budget, and represents the Federation in all the legal business and legal disputes of his administration.

Articles 29, 30 and 31.

[These Articles provide for the publicity of debates, and for the establishment of a tribunal to scrutinize the poll and adjudicate concerning the deputies.]

Article 32.

For a decision of the Reichstag, a simple majority is required, where no other proportion of votes is prescribed by the Constitution. Standing Orders may permit exceptions in the case of elections to be undertaken by the Reichstag. The number required to form a quorum is regulated by Standing Orders.

Article 33.

The Reichstag and its Committees may require the presence of the Federal Chancellor and of any Federal Minister.

The Federal Chancellor, the Federal Minister and Commissioners appointed by them, have access to the sittings of the Reichstag and its Committees. The States are entitled to send plenipotentiaries to these sittings, for the purpose of stating the point of view of their Government with regard to the subject under discussion.

At their request, the Government representatives must be heard during the debate, also the representatives of the Federal Government, without regard to the Order of the Day.

They are subject to the authority of the President.

Article 34.

The Reichstag has the right which, on the motion of a fifth of its members, becomes an obligation—to appoint Committees of Enquiry. These Committees examine evidence considered necessary by themselves or by the movers of the motion for their appointment. The proceedings are public, but may be held in private if desired by the Committee, and supported by a two-thirds' majority. The proceedings of the Committee are regulated and the number of its members determined by Standing Orders.

The Courts and administrative authorities are bound to comply with the request of such Committees for the production of evidence; the documents of the authorities must be laid before them if desired. Wherever applicable, the regulations as to criminal procedure are made use of in the investigations of the Committees and of the authorities applied to by them, but the privacy of correspondence and of the Postal, Telegraph and Telephone Services must be respected.

Article 35.

The Reichstag appoints a Standing Committee for Foreign Affairs which may also continue its work beyond the session of the Reichstag and after the termination of the election, or the dissolution of the Reichstag, until the assembly of the new Reichstag. The sittings of this Committee are not public unless so decreed by the Committee upon a two-thirds' majority.

The Reichstag also appoints a Standing Committee, for the protection of the rights of the representation of the people in relation to the Federal Government, for the time following the session, and after the termination of an election.

These Committees have the same power as Committees of Enquiry.

Articles 36 and 37.

[Members of the Reichstag may not be proceeded against on account of their actions in the House. No Member may be arrested during a Session without consent of the House.]

Article 38.

[Members may refuse evidence concerning matters confided to them in their capacity as deputies.]

Article 39.

[Members of the Military Forces do not require leave for the exercise of their duties as deputies, and will be granted leave to prepare for an election.]

Article 40.

[Members to have free railway passes.]

SECTION III.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FEDERATION AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Article 41.

The President of the Federation is elected by the whole German people.

Every German who has completed his 35th year is eligible. Details are determined by a Federal law.

Article 42.

The President of the Federation when entering upon his office in the Reichstag, takes the following oath :—

“I swear to dedicate my powers to the welfare of the German people, to enlarge their sphere of usefulness, to guard them from injury, to observe the Constitution and the laws of the Federation, to fulfil my duties conscientiously, and to do justice to every man.”

The addition of a religious asseveration is permissible.

Article 43.

The President of the Federation remains in office for seven years. Re-election is permissible.

Before the expiration of the set term, the President of the Federation may, upon the motion of the Reichstag, be removed from office by the vote of the people. The decision of the Reichstag requires a two-thirds' majority. By such a decision, the President of the Federation is prevented from the further exercise of his office. The refusal to remove him from office, expressed by the vote of the people, is equivalent to re-election, and involves the dissolution of the Reichstag.

Penal proceedings may not be taken against the President of the Federation without the consent of the Reichstag.

Article 44.

The President of the Federation cannot at the same time be a member of the Reichstag.

Article 45.

The President of the Federation represents the Federation in international relations. He concludes alliances and other treaties with Foreign Powers in the name of the Federation. He accredits and receives Ambassadors.

The declaration of war and the conclusion of peace are dependent upon the passing of a Federal law.

Alliances and treaties with foreign states, which refer to subjects of Federal legislation, require the consent of the Reichstag.

Article 46.

The President of the Federation appoints and dismisses Federal officials and officers, where no other system is determined by law. He may depute these powers to other authorities.

Article 47.

The President of the Federation has Supreme Command over all the Armed Forces of the Federation.

Article 48.

In the case of a State not fulfilling the duties imposed on it by the Federal Constitution or the Federal laws, the President of the Federation may enforce their fulfilment with the help of armed forces.

Where public security and order are seriously disturbed or endangered within the Federation, the President of the Federation may take the measures necessary for their restoration, intervening in case of need with the help of armed forces. For this purpose he is permitted, for the time being, to abrogate, either wholly or partially, the fundamental laws laid down in Articles 114, 115, 117, 118, 123, 124 and 153.

The President of the Federation must, without delay, inform the Reichstag of any measures taken in accordance with paragraphs 1 or 2 of this Article. Such measures shall be withdrawn upon the demand of the Reichstag.

Where there is danger in delay, the State Government may take provisional measures of the kind described in paragraph 2, for its own territory. Such measures shall be withdrawn upon the demand of the President of the Federation or the Reichstag.

Details are determined by a Federal law.

Article 49.

The President of the Federation exercises the prerogative of mercy for the Federation.

Amnesties require a Federal law.

Article 50.

All orders and decrees of the President of the Federation, including those relating to the Armed Forces, require for their validity the countersignature of the Federal Chancellor or the competent Federal Minister. The countersignature implies the undertaking of responsibility.

Article 51.

In case of any disability, the President of the Federation is represented by the Chancellor of the Federation. Should it be probable that the disability might continue for some time, his representative shall be appointed by a Federal law.

The same applies in the case of premature vacancy in the office of President, up to the completion of the new election.

Article 52.

The Federal Government consists of the Chancellor of the Federation and the Federal Ministers.

Article 53.

The President of the Federation appoints and dismisses the Chancellor of the Federation, and, on the latter's recommendation, the Federal Ministers.

Article 54.

The Chancellor of the Federation and the Federal Ministers require, for the administration of their office, the confidence of the Reichstag. Any one of them must resign, should the confidence of the House be withdrawn by an express resolution.

Article 55.

The Chancellor of the Federation presides over the Federal Government and directs its business, according to a standing order drawn up by the Federal Government and approved by the President of the Federation.

Article 56.

The Chancellor of the Federation determines the main lines of policy, for which he is responsible to the Reichstag. Within these main lines each Federal Minister directs independently the department entrusted to him, for which he is personally responsible to the Reichstag.

Article 57.

The Federal Ministers must submit to the Federal Government for advice and decision the drafts of all Bills, also all matters for which such a course is prescribed by the Constitution, or by law, as well as differences of opinion upon questions affecting the sphere of action of several Federal Ministers.

Article 58.

The Federal Government comes to a decision by the majority of votes. In case of an even vote the Speaker gives the casting vote.

Article 59.

The Reichstag is entitled to arraign the President of the Federation, Federal Chancellor and the Federal Ministers, before the Supreme Court of Judicature for the German Federation, for culpable violation of the Federal Constitution, or of a Federal law. The motion for the arraignment must be signed by at least one hundred members of the Reichstag, and requires the consent of the majority prescribed for alterations of the Constitution. Details are regulated by the Federal law as to the Supreme Court of Judicature.

SECTION IV.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL (Reichsrat).Article 60.

A Reichsrat is formed for the representation of the German States in Federal legislation and administration.

Article 61.

In the Reichsrat, each State has at least one vote. In the larger States, one vote is assigned for each million inhabitants. A surplus, which is not less than the total population of the smallest State, is reckoned as a million. No State may be represented by more than two-fifths of all the votes.

Federation, acquire the right of participation in the Reichsrat, with the number of votes corresponding to her population. Until that time, the representatives of German Austria have the right of being heard.

The number of votes shall be redistributed by the Reichsrat, after each general census.

Article 62.

In Committees appointed by the Reichsrat from its members no State shall have more than one vote.

Article 63.

The States are represented in the Reichsrat by members of their Governments. However, one-half of the Prussian votes are assigned, according to a State law, to representatives of Prussian Provincial administrations.

The States are entitled to send to the Council as many representatives as the number of votes assigned to them.

Article 64.

The Federal Government must convene the Reichsrat upon the demand of one-third of its members.

Article 65.

The Reichsrat and its Committees are presided over by a member of the Federal Government. The members of the latter are entitled, and, if requested, are bound, to take part in the deliberations of the Reichsrat and its Committees. They must be heard upon their demand at any time during the debate.

Article 66.

The Federal Government, as well as any member of the Reichsrat, are authorized to lay proposals before the Reichsrat.

The Reichsrat regulates its business procedure by Standing Orders.

The full sittings of the Reichsrat are open to the public, but the latter may be excluded during the discussion of certain subjects, in accordance with Standing Orders.

In taking the vote, a simple majority suffices for decision.

Article 67.

The Reichsrat shall be kept in touch by the Federal Ministries with the progress of affairs in the Federation. In discussions upon important subjects the Committees of the Reichsrat concerned shall be summoned to attend by the Federal Ministries.

SECTION V.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION.

Article 68.

Bills are introduced by the Federal Government, or by Members of the Reichstag.

Federal laws are passed by the Reichstag.

Article 69.

The introduction of Bills by the Federal Government requires the consent of the Reichsrat. Should the Government and the Reichsrat not be in agreement, the former may, nevertheless, introduce the Bill, but, in doing so, must state the divergent views of the Reichsrat.

Should the Reichsrat adopt a bill to which the Government does not agree, the latter must introduce the bill in the Reichstag with a statement of their point of view.

Article 70.

The President of the Federation shall prepare for publication the laws which have received sanction in accordance with the Constitution, and, within the period of one month, shall promulgate them in the Federal Gazette (Reichsgesetzblatt).

Article 71.

Federal laws come into force, if no different decision has been made, fourteen days from the day on which the Federal Gazette (Reichsgesetzblatt) was published in the Federal capital.

Article 72.

The promulgation of a Federal law shall be deferred for two months, if one-third of the Reichstag demands it. Laws which both the Reichstag and the Reichsrat declare to be urgent may, however, be promulgated by the President of the Federation, in spite of such a demand.

Article 73.

A law passed by the Reichstag shall, before its promulgation, be submitted to the decision of the people, if the President of the Federation so determines, within one month.

A law, the promulgation of which is deferred on the proposal of at least one-third of the Reichstag, shall be submitted to the decision of the people, if desired by one-twentieth of those entitled to the franchise. Further, there may be an appeal to the decision of the people, if requested by one-tenth of those entitled to the franchise, after the production of a draft-bill. The people's request, which must be supported by a complete draft of the Bill, shall be submitted to the Reichstag by the Government, accompanied by a statement of their attitude towards it. The appeal of the people shall not take place if the desired Bill be adopted without the alteration in the Reichstag.

With regard to the budget, to laws dealing with taxation, and to regulations as to pay, only the President of the Federation has the right of bringing about an appeal to the people.

The methods of procedure for an appeal to, or a demand by, the people, are regulated by a Federal law.

Article 74.

The Reichsrat has the right of protest against a law passed by the Reichstag.

This protest must be lodged with the Federal Government within two weeks after the final vote in the Reichstag, and must be supported by reasons, presented within another two weeks at latest.

In case of a protest, the law shall be brought before the Reichstag for further consideration. Should the Reichstag and the Reichsrat not arrive at an agreement, the President of the Federation may, within three months, order an appeal to the people upon the subject in dispute. Should the President not make use of this right, the law does not come into operation. Should the Reichstag decide by a two-thirds' majority against the protest of the Reichsrat, the President must either promulgate the law within three months, in the form approved by the Reichstag, or order an appeal to the people.

Article 75.

A decision of the Reichstag can only be annulled by the decision of the people, where a majority of those entitled to the franchise have taken part in the vote.

Article 76.

The Constitution may be altered by legislation. But decisions of the Reichstag as to such alterations come into effect only if two-thirds of the legal total of members be present, and if at least two-thirds of those present have given their consent. Decisions of the Reichsrat in favour of alteration of the Constitution also require a majority of two-thirds of the votes cast. Where an alteration of the Constitution is decided by an appeal to the people at their request, the consent of the majority of voters is necessary.

Should the Reichstag have decided upon an alteration of the Constitution in spite of the protest of the Reichsrat, the President of the Federation is not allowed to promulgate this law if the Reichsrat, within two weeks, demands an appeal to the people.

Article 77.

The Federal Government issues the general administrative instructions necessary for the execution of Federal laws, so far as there are no legal enactments to the contrary. For this purpose, the Government needs the consent of the Reichsrat, when the execution of Federal laws is the business of the State authorities.

SECTION VI.

FEDERAL ADMINISTRATION.

Article 78.

The administration of relations with foreign States is exclusively the business of the Federation.

In affairs regulated by State legislation, the States may conclude agreements with foreign States. These agreements require the consent of the Federation.

Conventions with Foreign States as to the alteration of the Federal frontiers are concluded by the Federal Government, with the consent of the State concerned. Alterations in the frontier may be effected only as the result of a Federal law, except in the case of a simple rectification of the borders of uninhabited portions of a district.

In order to guarantee the representation of interests arising for certain States from their special economic relations, or their position in regard to foreign States, the Federal Government undertakes the requisite arrangements and measures in agreement with the States concerned.

Article 79.

The defence of the Federation is a Federal question. The military constitution of the German people is regulated uniformly by means of a Federal law, having regard to the individual conditions of each State.

Article 80.

Colonial affairs are exclusively the business of the Federal Government.

Article 81.

All German merchantmen form a uniform commercial fleet.

Article 82.

Germany forms one customs and commercial district, surrounded by one common customs frontier. The customs frontier coincides with that bordering foreign countries. On the sea, it is formed by the shore of the mainland, and the islands belonging to Federal territory. For the course of the customs frontier on the sea or on other bodies of water, deviations may be fixed.

The territories, or portions of the territories of a foreign State, may be included in the customs district by State treaties or by agreement.

In special circumstances certain parts may be excluded from the customs district. With regard to free ports, exclusion can be set aside only by means of a law altering the Constitution.

Places excluded from the customs may join a foreign customs district by means of State treaties, or by agreement.

All natural products, as well as products of manufacture and industry, which are allowed free trade within the Federation, may be transported in any direction across the frontier of the States and municipalities. Exceptions may be allowed by a Federal law.

Article 83.

Customs and duties upon articles of consumption are administered by the Federal authorities.

In the administration of Federal taxes by Federal authorities, arrangements shall be made so as to ensure to the various States the protection of special State interests within the domain of agriculture, trade, manufacture and industry.

Article 84.

The Federal Government takes measures by means of laws in respect of :

1. The organization of the administration of taxes in the States, so far as is required for the purpose of uniform and equal execution of the Federal laws on taxation ;
2. The organization and powers of the authorities entrusted with the superintendence of the execution of Federal laws on taxation ;
3. The settlement of accounts with the States ;
4. The reimbursement of expenses of administration in the execution of the Federal laws on taxation.

Article 85.

All receipts and expenditure of the Federation must be estimated for each financial year, and shown in the budget.

The budget is fixed by law, before the opening of the financial year.

Items of expenditure are, as a rule, granted for one year ; in special cases, they may be granted for a longer period. In other respects, provisions in the Federal budget law, which extend beyond the financial year, or do not refer to the receipts and expenditure of the Federation, or their administration, are inadmissible.

In the draft of the budget, the Reichstag may neither increase items of expenditure, nor include new ones, without consent of the Reichsrat. Instead of the consent of the Reichsrat, the provisions of Article 74 may be applied.

Article 86.

In the following financial year the Chancellor of the Exchequer presents to the Reichsrat and the Reichstag an account of the application of all Federal receipts, thus relieving the Government of responsibility. The auditing of the account is regulated by Federal law.

Article 87.

Funds may be obtained upon credit only in case of special necessity, and, as a rule, only for expenditure on productive undertakings. Such a proceeding, as well as the acceptance of a security chargeable to the Federation, may only be effected upon the authority of a Federal law.

Article 88.

The postal and telegraph services, together with the telephone services, are exclusively the affair of the Federation.

Postage stamps are uniform for the whole Federation.

The Federal Government, with the consent of the Reichsrat, issues the instructions which determine the principles and charges for the use of the means of communication. With the consent of the Reichsrat, the Government may transfer these powers to the Postmaster-General.

For the purpose of consultative co-operation in the affairs of postal, telegraphic and telephonic communication, and of the tariffs, the Federal Government shall, with the consent of the Reichsrat, establish an advisory Council.

Treaties referring to communication with foreign countries are concluded only by the Federal Government.

Article 89.

It is the duty of the Federal Government to assume ownership of the railways serving for general traffic, and to manage them on a uniform traffic system.

The rights of States to acquire private railways shall be transferred, upon demand, to the Federal Government.

Article 90.

With the transfer of the railways, the Federal Government assumes the power of expropriation and the sovereign rights of the States as regards the railway service. The Supreme Court of Judicature decides, in case of dispute, as to the extent of such rights.

Article 91.

The Federal Government, with the consent of the Reichsrat, issues orders for regulating the construction, management and working of the railways. With the consent of the Reichsrat, the Government may transfer these powers to the duly qualified Federal Minister.

connection ; (4) assumes control of tariffs, river and maritime police and takes over the duties of the River Works Department. Every department for the administration of waterways must allow others to be linked with it.]

Article 98.

[Advisory Councils for the waterways to be established with the consent of the Reichsrat in accordance with the instructions of the Federal Government.]

Article 99.

Article 101.

[The Federal Government must administer all sea beacons.]

SECTION VII.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

Article 102.

Judges are independent and subject only to the law.

Article 103.

The regular jurisdiction is exercised by the Federal High Court of Justice, and the courts of justice of the States.

Article 104.

The judges of the regular jurisdiction are appointed for life. They may be removed from office permanently or temporarily only by authority of a judicial decision, and only upon the grounds and by the methods of procedure fixed by the laws ; the same applies to change of post or superannuation. Age limits may be fixed by legislation, upon reaching which judges shall retire.

Provisional removal from office, occurring by authority of the law, is not affected by the above.

In the case of a change of arrangements in the courts of justice or their circuits, the State Administration of Justice may order compulsory transfer to another court, or removals from office, but only on condition of the retention of the full salary.

These decisions do not apply to judges on commercial tribunals, petty judges and jurymen.

Article 105.

Exceptional Courts are illegal. No one may be withdrawn from his legal judge. Legal regulations regarding Courts-Martial and Summary Military Courts are not affected by the above. Military Courts of Honour are abolished.
